HALF-MILLION DOLLAR OUTFIT IS UNCOVERED

The raid resulted from the arrests of men identifying themselves as William E. Davis and Harry Harris and was said to have completed the roundup of a nation wide counterfeit ring.

Davis and Harris were said to be members of a gang which operated in Indiana. Davis was held under $50,000 bond.

Denies Guilt
Mr. Werling, Adams county clerk, who was arrested in Chicago, 8 week ago today with Clark, and William McKinley Van Pelt, both of Fort Wayne, when authorities found $500 of counterfeit money in Werling's auto, maintains he is innocent of any charge made in connection with the counterfeit plot. Werling claims he was acting to secure information to be turned over to the federal government and obtain a reward. He was released on $3,000 bond and an investigation has been going on. Kintz was released on bond yesterday.

EXPECT SHIFT IN PERSONNEL

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE ONE) the success of the AAA code and marketing agreements as contrasted with crop reduction measures. He was reported to have told friends that the issue had come to a crisis, and was represented as being particularly bitter toward the brain trust group led by Assistant Secretary Rex Tugwell, which has insisted with Wallace that crop restriction rather than marketing agreements held out the most hope of improving farm conditions.

All codes in AAA except those relating to first processing of farm products were ordered transferred to NRA. This was interpreted to mean all AAA code negotiations except those dealing directly with raw farm produce such as milling, packing and canning.

KNAVE'S GIRL

By JOAN CLAYTON

COPYRIGHT 1932, KING FEATURES SYNDICATE, INC.

SYNOPSIS

Fear that Bill McGee, the racketeer, would wreak vengeance on her and her family if she refused to go out with him, caused lovely Patricia Warren to accept his invitations. Bill is shot by a rival gangster while in Pat's company. Pat rushes home in terror and her stepmother puts her out, saying the police are looking for Pat. Unable to find employment, Pat resorts to her card skill and plays professional bridge. Julian Haverholt, noted bridge expert, makes her his partner. While they are discussing business details at his home, Clark Tracy, the polo player and Pat's secret love, calls. She had met him once but he does not recognize her. Haverholt introduces Pat as his niece. She is indignant, but he explains later that he was thinking of her reputation and that it would be advisable for her to assume that role as long as she is to stay in his home. Pat visits her old home and finds that Bill McGee has wrecked her stepmother's dressmaking shop because Pat fled from him the night of the shooting. She returns to Haverholt who promises to protect her. Accustomed to poverty, Pat revels in the luxury of her surroundings. Reading an announcement of Clark's approaching marriage to Marthe March, Pat experiences pangs of jealousy. Following the settling of a bridge argument, Haverholt wants to give Pat a gift to celebrate their coming to an agreement. She asks for a roadster like Marthe March's. Pat meets Haverholt at the automobile sales room and is surprised to see Clark with him. Clark tells Pat how fond Haverholt is of her and she is troubled.

CHAPTER TWENTY-TWO

"You've chosen a car exactly like my fiancée's except that hers is red. You must meet Marthe. You'll like her."

"I'm sure I will," replied Patricia, wondering what his reaction would be if he knew that she had met Marthe and hated her heartily. She had a well defined notion that Marthe would not like her. "Julian has told me a lot about Miss March," she added politely.

"He taught Marthe all she knows about bridge," said Clark. "She tells me that she is almost good enough to be a ranking player. I wouldn't know myself. Cards are something of a mystery to me, always were, though Marthe drags me into a game occasionally." He smiled reminiscently. "Julian was once kind enough to say that after five years of close, assiduous practice I might, with luck, develop into a hopeless dud."

They both laughed.

"Bridge isn't important," suggested Patricia helpfully.

"That from Julian Haverholt's niece!" exclaimed Clark with affected horror.

"Don't ever breathe it," whispered Patricia, adopting a conspiratorial air.

"Again they laughed, ecstatically. Patricia felt herself carried along on the man's amusement and interest. She forgot Marthe, forgot Haverholt, forgot everything except that Clark was watching her attentively and admiringly. How good looking he was, not handsome in the dramatic fashion that Haverholt was handsome, perhaps, but boyishly tan, slim hiped, broad-shouldered, vital as sportsmen are vital.

"Have you played much polo lately?"

"Not much—a little. The season isn't officially open yet. Do you like polo?"

"I love it," replied Patricia, whose polo had been confined to brief shots pictured in the news reels. She would have confessed an interest in anything which brought so eager and enthusiastic a light into Clark's eyes.

"You must come to the Club when the season begins," he remarked, delighting her by making future plans, putting their growing friendship on a firmer basis. He added reflectively, "Julian hates all out-door sports but perhaps with your own car you can manage to escape from the bridge table occasionally."

"I hope so," said Patricia composedly, "after I learn to drive it."

"You don't drive?"

"Not at all."

"May I teach you?"

"That would be nice," agreed Patricia, trying to control the absurd tramping of her heart.

"When would you like your first lesson?"

"When would you?"

"Shall we say day after tomorrow, if you get the car?" Glancing over her shoulder, Clark amended, "You'll get the car. Here comes Julian! Look at him, would you?"

Patricia looked. The two exchanged a confidential smile. Julian Haverholt wore the expression of the cat who had finished the last of the cream. Certainly, no conquering hero had ever been more glowingly triumphant.

"Well, Patricia," he announced, coming up to them, "your car will be on the street in ten minutes. Does that please you?"

"A great deal."

"I knew that you would have your own way, Julian," interposed Clark. He added thoughtfully, "I hope the time never comes when I want something that you want too."

Haverholt's eyes rested upon Patricia. His glance was reflective, meditative. Somehow it frightened her. There was an interval of rather tense silence. For an instant Patricia had the fleeting, curious illusion that the two men, so strangely dissimilar, faced each other like antagonists in an invisible ring, like opposing warriors on some desolated battlefield. An absurd idea, but there it was.

Then Haverholt said lightly, "That's a rather unlikely contingency, Clark. My wants are few and simple."

Patricia broke in hurriedly. "Mr. Tracy has promised to give me a driving lesson on Wednesday."

"See that she doesn't break her neck, Clark. She's a reckless youngster at heart."

On Wednesday morning Patricia opened her eyes to the knowledge of something pleasant. She remembered instantly. The day was perfect, bright blue, a spring day even in the heart of New York. In the garden outside the trees were putting out their first tentative buds, the air was sweet and cool. She sang as she dressed, was still singing as she went downstairs. She stopped when she reached the door of the card room, knocked, slipped inside when Julian bade her enter. As usual he was seated at the card table, a stuffy, dull occupation thought Patricia for such a day.

"I suppose you're just in the mood for a session at bridge," said Haverholt dryly.

"Then, you've forgotten," said Patricia reproachfully. She continued self consciously, "Don't you remember I was to have a driving lesson today?"

"Clark can't come," Haverholt advised her baldly.

"Clark can't come," repeated Patricia as if the statement were too incredible for belief. "Why not?"

"He telephoned last night after you'd gone to bed and asked me to convey his apologies. He left early this morning with the Marches. They decided quite unexpectedly to fly down to Aiken."

"I see," said Patricia in a still voice.

She attempted to hide the extent of her hurt and disappointment. There was no reason for her to be hurt. To Clark, if not to her, the engagement had been a casual thing, a pleasant kindness extended to the niece of a friend, so completely unimportant that he had

Chicago Cubs Buy Another Pitcher

Chicago, Dec. 7.—(UP)—The Chicago Cubs today announced purchase of Dick Ward, Pacific Coast league pitcher of the Los Angeles team, for three players and an unannounced sum of cash.

Ward, only 22 years old and having just completed his second year in organized baseball, was the leading pitcher last season in his league. He won 25 games and lost 9. Jim Mosoff, outfielder, Frank Demaree, outfielder, and Roy Hershaw, pitcher, were sent to Los Angeles in the deal. Mosoff was released outright and Demaree and Hershaw were sent on option.

Ward is a right-handed pitcher. Appearing in 43 games this year he allowed 128 runs for an earned run average of 3.25, third best in the league. He struck out 172 batters and walked 114.

lock in his pocket and the fact that Policeman Miller saw him coming from the store.

Credence was given to the theory that another man and a woman were accomplices of the apprehended thief. Carl Hammond, who delivers mail to the railroad stations during the night, said he saw an automobile parked on the south of Madison street, near the Second street corner, as he drove to the Pennsylvania station. A woman was seated in the auto. The auto was a new one. No one knew what kind of a license plate it carried.

The auto drove west on Madison street when Policeman Miller appeared on the scene.

The scarfs taken from the store were piled on a glass case. The thieves cleaned up the lot.

A careful check-up of the stock was being made this afternoon and Charles Teeple, one of the owners, stated 40 men's suits had been stolen. The suits had an average wholesale value of more than $15 each.

Third store robbery
This is the third large store robbery in Decatur in little over a year. In the fall of 1932 the E. F. Gass store was ransacked of nearly the entire stock. The loss was estimated at about $5,000. On March 28, 1933, the Vance and Linn clothing store, located on the opposite corner from the Teeple and Peterson store, was robbed of overcoats and suits. The loss was about $2500.

The Teeple and Peterson store carries burglar insurance.
