PLAN BALANCE OF BUDGET IN YEAR OF 1935

plemented a previous statement that the country was in the process of recovery. The budget message pledged the administration to a balanced income and outgo in what Mr. Roosevelt describes as "the third year of recovery."

Much will remain to be done in that third year and the years to come after it. The President hopes, for instance, that it eventually will be possible to find within the government's income approximately $500,000,000 a year for planned flood control, power and irrigation development. Expenditure would be on projects such as that now underway in the valley of the Tennessee river.

Senator Norris, Repn., Neb., has introduced in congress a bill to carry on such a program for the Missouri river. Other great streams await development. Mr. Roosevelt does not appear to have budgeted directly for the Missouri river but he is asking an additional $1,166,000,000 of emergency funds from congress for this fiscal year and wants $2,000,000,000 for the next fiscal twelve-month.

Congress will appropriate the money despite shivers at the immensity of the $31,834,000,000 (B) national debt which Mr. Roosevelt expects to be accumulated by June 1935.

PLANT OFFERS NEW PRODUCT

ern and efficient machinery was installed at the plant and Heber Humhager, production manager, directed operations. Under his capable guidance, a great future is predicted for this entirely new and different butter product.

An extensive advertising campaign will be conducted to acquaint the public with the new production. Augmenting local newspaper advertising, a radio program over WGL will be given every evening at 8 p. m., and store demonstrations will be held.

Mr. Klepper will give a brief sketch of the evolution of the butter industry over WOWO at 9:15 o'clock Wednesday morning.

INJUNCTION IS TELLING BLOW TO PRODUCERS

went into conference to formulate a legal defense. Meanwhile it appeared likely that picketing would continue.

The action came at a time when serious outbreaks were considered imminent. The independent dairy companies were continuing their efforts to break the blockade by running in train loads of milk from Wisconsin points. Airplane shipments were instituted by one dairy and sporadic attempts to push through truckloads of milk were continuing.

Threats to hang W. R. Brown, proprietor of the Farmer Dairy company, Blue Island, were reported to police. Armed guards were placed about Brown's property after pickets threatened him and displayed ropes and guns. One of Brown's trucks was destroyed.

Green believed the injunction would serve as sufficient protection to dairy trucks.

"If the farmers violate the injunction they are fighting an order of the United States government and opening themselves to prosecution by every agency of the government including federal groups," Green said. "Such violations would be revolution."

Green said that the Economy Dairy will not ask for escorts of United States marshals.

"We run five trucks a day into Wisconsin. We will attach copies of the federal injunction to each truck and resume regular service. We will leave it up to the court to enforce the injunction," he said.

The petition for an injunction charged the Pure Milk association officers, Henry P. Pfister,

“KNAVE’S GIRL”

By JOAN CLAYTON
COPYRIGHT 1932, KING FEATURES SYNDICATE, INC.

"You look like the Empress Josephine. It's the color that does it," he mused.

be all over town that we weren't invited!"

"Why can't you go without me?" "Because I won't, that's why. Buy yourself a new frock. We're stepping out on the third."

Patricia bought herself a new gown, a gown of deepest blue. The earnest little salesgirl assured her that the color was new, was being taken up by the smartest women.

"Not everybody can wear it," the salesgirl said, "but on you it's marvelous. It's just right for your hair."

"It does look rather well, doesn't it?" said Patricia indifferently, turning to observe her reflection in the mirror. "Isn't it just a little tight?"

"Not for your figure. You're slim as a wand. Do you diet?"

"No," replied Patricia, smiling. "I eat like a horse."

"You're lucky."

"Will the dress be ready on the second of the month? I plan to wear it on the third."

"Indeed it will." As Patricia stepped back into her trim little suit and adjusted her fur, the salesgirl carefully folded the soft, luscious satin and said: "We feel quite honored that you came to us, Miss Haverholt. Madame told me that you plan to wear the blue to the March ball."

"I do."

This time the other girl did not say, "You're lucky." But the words were written in her eyes. Strange to be, envied, thought Patricia, walking from the dim gloom of the shop into the luxurious afternoon.

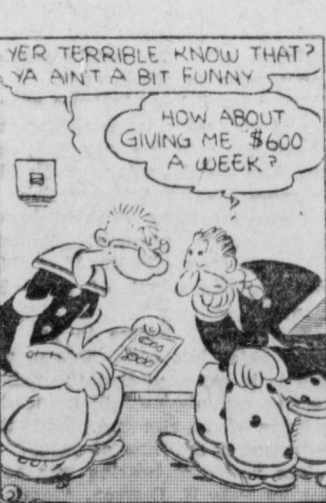

The other girl, the girl in the plain black dress had envied her for more than her figure. She had envied Patricia her delicious leisure, her position, her money, her ability to buy a frock without asking the price. She had wistfully imagined a world where such frocks were worn, a world where men in dinner clothes took girls to the theatre, not to movies, a world of swift moving cars and glamorous evenings, a world that was all luxury and all pleasure. Patricia knew that feeling.

"I don't see why."

"We must be seen there," persisted Julian impatiently. "You should know the racket by this time. If we don't appear at that ball, by the following noon it will
