SYNOPSIS

Stanley Paige, beautiful, young society girl, is left penniless when her lawyer speculates with her money and loses. Stanley, however, cares little for the money, feeling that she has everything in the love of fascinating Drew Armitage. But when Drew breaks their engagement, saying it would be impossible to marry on his income, she is heartbroken. Rather than accept aid from her wealthy friends, Stanley rents a cheap furnished room and disappears from her exclusive circle to try and make her own way. Her friends agree that a better way would have been to marry handsome Perry Deverest, but Stanley cannot forget Drew. One day, she meets John Harmon Northrup, struggling young author. A strong friendship ensues and they become very necessary to one another. John Harmon is in love with Stanley but refrains from telling her because of Drew. At the beach, he catches her in his arms as she is about to fall. Her nearness intoxicates him. He tells himself he must never let it happen again, but try as he might, he cannot forget the ecstasy of that moment.

CHAPTER TWENTY-FIVE

He passed Stanley and reached the beach first. She came out of the ocean, shaking the water from her eyes, pulling off her tight scarlet cap.

"Let's build up a fire, John Harmon. I'm simply freezing cold!" They found driftwood and piled it up on the sand. The slow gray smoke hung heavily in the air, burst suddenly into blue flames, sprang into a leaping red blaze.

Stanley investigated the lunch basket and found some sandwiches. They ate them hungrily, sweaters tied about their shoulders, bodies relaxed and tingling in the warmth of the fire.

"I mustn't look at her," John Harmon thought desperately. "We must keep on talking," he thought. And there was nothing to say. "I've known this for a long time, but I've never admitted it. I never intended to—I don't intend to now." And he kept his eyes fixed on the ocean.

"It's been a day to remember," Stanley said softly, poking the fire with a sunbleached twig. "It's been lovely and gentle and sort of wistful. Haven't you felt like that about it, John Harmon?"

He nodded, still refusing her his eyes. "October is like that—beautiful and breathtaking and sort of poignant." He hesitated a bit over the last word. He was still a little shy about words like that. It was still easier to write them than to speak them.

"It's like an enchanting interlude," he went on slowly, "giving lavishly, promising nothing. That's what makes it so unbearably lovely. Stanley, the sense of elusiveness one feels about a day like this, the sense of flight, sustained for a moment, then gone forever." His voice stopped abruptly on a rough, tight note. It was not the day he was describing, but this other thing—this tremulous, fragile relationship between himself and this slim girl beside him... an enchanting interlude promising nothing, the sense of flight—sustained for a moment, then gone forever.

Stanley was not looking at him. Her eyes were on the fire. She answered him softly, slowly. "That's all life is—don't you think?—beautiful moments held for a space, then gone forever."

A searing little pain flicked John Harmon's heart. He knew that note in Stanley's voice, he'd heard it often enough, heaven knows! He knew what he would find in her eyes, if he had the courage to look, knew the twisted, gallant little smile that would be lying on her lips. She hadn't forgotten. She might never forget. He closed his eyes swiftly, felt again the soft, warm pressure of her body against his, saw again the dripping sweetness of her mouth, the drenched softness of her eyes... Knew that it must never happen again, that he must forget that it had ever happened at all.

"I've never really forgiven you, you know, for running away," said Marcia.

"I'm cold," Stanley sprang up suddenly. The fire had burned itself into a mound of crumbling coals, deep pink and molten gold; its edges already curling softly into a frail, white ash.

"Time to be going home, John Harmon," she told him, giving him her hands, pulling him to his feet, "summer's over."

For a shattering, nerve-tightened second, he felt that surely his arms must go around her, that his mouth must find hers and cling there, that nothing mattered except his need of her—then, he knew it wasn't so, that always, now and forever, her need of him was the important thing, the only thing that would ever matter.

He dropped her hands, turned and walked with her up the beach. On the ride back into town John Harmon was very gay. He found a lot to talk about. He talked lightly and of inconsequential things, he talked against time and a moment he didn't want to remember and a quiver in Stanley's voice that he couldn't forget. And Stanley listened, and laughed now and then, and said very little. She had found something rather precious in the country that day, she didn't want to lose it—and words dispel so many things.

The third week in October Marcia Wingate came back to town, Nigel Stern bought a new and rare portfolio of etchings—and Stanley lost her job.

Marcia slid back into her own particular groove in town with the sleek agility of a cat returning to its own back yard. Connections temporarily lost during the summer were picked up again, certain changes were noted and accepted; a divorce here, a marriage there, a new name added to her list, an old one dropped, an intrigue smiled upon, a scandal covered up. But all in all it was much the same sort of thing, one season after another—much light conversation, lovely clothes, carefully concealed emotions and cleverly expressed opinions.

It was Marcia's world. She moved in it, gracefully and with a great

Aiding on U. S. Trading Plan

George Peek Owen D. Young

David Sarnoff

A plan closely resembling the soviet system of government barter, being evolved by President Roosevelt and is expected to be made public coincident with the President's tariff message to Congress. The plan based on suggestions by George N. Peek, former A. A. A. mogul, Secretary of State Cordell Hull, Owen D. Young, of General Electric, David Sarnoff, of Radio Corporation of America, and others, would function in the same way as the Amtorg Company functions for Russia. One feature of Peek's suggestion would virtually make every U. S. Consulate abroad trading station for selling American goods and buying foreign products.
