"THE LONE WOLF'S SON"

by LOUIS JOSEPH VANCE

SYNOPSIS

Sailing from France to America aboard the S.S. "Navarre," Michel Lanyard, reformed "Lone Wolf," erstwhile master crook, meets wealthy Fay Crozier, one of his antique shop patrons, and her lovely daughter Fenno. Mrs. Crozier shows Lanyard the famous Habsburg emeralds which she bought secretly to avoid payment of duty. Lanyard's experienced eye discovers that counterfeiters have been substituting for the gems. He promises to try and retrieve the emeralds. Lanyard suspects Maurice Parry, a youthful fellow-passenger, who appears deeply interested in Fenno. The resemblance between Lanyard and Maurice causes the former to wonder if they are related. In a bridge game with two card sharks, Maurice loses heavily. Lanyard joins the players as Parry's partner, catches their opponents cheating and threatens to expose them unless Maurice's loss is called off. Later, Lanyard tells the appreciative Maurice that he can repay him by returning Mrs. Crozier's jewels. The youth removes the top of his cane only to find that Lanyard had been there before him and had replaced the stolen emeralds with zircons (false gems). Maurice discloses that he is Lanyard's son whom the latter believed killed during the war. Though happy at the reunion, Lanyard is disappointed to find his son a thief. Maurice explains he was forced to steal since boyhood in order to exist. Lanyard hopes his son's interest in Fenno will continue, for the boy's own good. Detective Crane, whom Lanyard knew from his "Lone Wolf" days, warns him that the two gamblers he exposed are "Jack Knife" Anderson and "English Archie," gangsters, who will seek revenge.

CHAPTER X

"That reminds me, you haven't answered my question yet."

"Question?"

"The one you ducked at the start-off—when I asked what came over you to make you feel you had a call to rescue that punk from a couple of tinhorns who weren't doing a thing, only trying to pick up a piece of pocket-money."

At this Lanyard gave a slow "Ah!" of admiration. "And you ask me to believe you slow-witted!"

"I don't call it any great stunt to take notice when you don't run true to form—man who can mind his own business as well as you can."

"All the same," Lanyard announced, "it will amuse me more to see how long it takes you to ferret out my motive unassisted."

And with a laughing shake of his head, Lanyard took himself off. He wasn't ready to publish his relationship to the Maurice Parry of the passenger-list before he had had another talk with the boy and settled on some tale to account for his manifest prosperity. And although any tale would serve as long as both father and son told it, there was no time to be lost, with Crane openly sniffing already at their secret. . . .

But Maurice, when again sighted from a distance, if still dancing attendance on Fenno Crozier, was no longer alone with her. A knot of young folk had formed round her chair, and the boy seemed to be so high in their favor already that the father once more forbore from disturbing him.

Nothing could be more calculated to prosper the fond paternal schemes, indeed, than such unexceptional associations.

Lanyard accordingly cut through to the port deck, emerging from a thwart-ship passage-way just in time to meet Messrs. Jack-knife Robinson and English Archie Barker strolling morosely aft, and to be cut dead by them.

For all of Crane's warning, the circumstance left no more immediate impression than that a casual glance aft from the forward companionway entrance marked the saturnine Jack-knife person all alone by the rail and English Archie nowhere visible.

Perhaps because the wind was freshening, with the sea beginning to break out whitecaps, Lanyard found the writing-room quite without its customary quota of ladies, assorted as to ages and conditions but all of one familiar frame of mind, tritely inscribing post-cards, supplied gratis by the steamship, to presumably envious friends at home. And when, after an hour or so, the long roar of the whistle drove in through his muffling concentration the news that it was noon, the abstracted eyes which the man lifted saw the room otherwise empty.

That it could conceivably matter how long he had been sitting there alone naturally never entered Lanyard's head.

He bent again to his letter and had piled a lively pen for perhaps fifteen minutes more when a voice pleasantly tuned said at his elbow: "So this is where you've been hiding! Maurice and I were looking all over!"

The reflection which leaped to his mind—"Maurice already, eh?"—and the normal association of ideas, caused Lanyard, as he rose, involuntarily to say aloud: "Fenno!" To which he was quick to add: "I beg your pardon—"

"No, no!" the girl gayly insisted. "I like it, M. Lanyard, from you."

"It's such an odd name and so delightful, so utterly the only name for you, one finds it far from easy to think of you in a style more formal."

"And anyway it would be silly—wouldn't it?—'mademoiselle' or 'miss' a minx! Please never call me anything but Fenno—I shall feel so much more at ease with you. And do sit down. I'm dying to talk."

When Lanyard had drawn up another chair he sat down, and in grave good-nature prompted: "About—"

"But—of course!—about your son."

"You are getting on with your siege of his peace of mind, aren't you?" Lanyard fenced to cover a disordered moment. "Considering that you have him at the stage already where he can't wait to tell you all his secrets."

"The girl had her mother's trick of dimpling on those in her good graces. 'It wasn't my rude trooper's wooing that made the lad tell all—it was because he's so proud of you, he just had to tell some one or bust.'"

"But had the good taste to choose you—"

"Oh, I don't say he would have been so ready if I hadn't made eyes at him! But his pride in you was the compelling motive, really."

"You make me very happy, Fenno."

"I should think you ought to be; it's so marvelously romantic, your finding each other like this. And when I think I had something to do with it, that it was I who first drew your attention to him—"

"Yes," Lanyard thoughtfully assented, "it is true, I do owe you that."

To undeceive her was, of course, not to be thought of. Lanyard for all that would have been glad to know how much, and in what detail, Maurice had told the girl. Beneath the lightness of Fenno's manner there were intimations of an entente which he found disturbing.

"And how proud you must be of him, that he not only came through an experience which would have destroyed any ordinary boy but came through a son you needn't be ashamed to own!"

"He is fortunate to have you think so well of him, Fenno. Maurice then, bears out the diagnosis of his

Huge Steel Order Contracted Today

East Chicago, Ind., Apr. 2.—(UP) Work for hundreds of steel employees in the Calumet area this summer was assured today with announcement of orders for steel rails costing $3,500,000.

The largest single order, $2,000,000, is divided between the Inland steel company of East Chicago and the Illinois steel company of Gary. The rails will be rolled for the Chicago and Erie and Illinois Central railroads.

The $2,000,000 order represented the largest single order since the depression.

Mrs. Dora Akey has gone to Muncie where she will visit until Thursday.

China's Aviation Boom Aided by America

CAPT. FRANK HAWKS

LEAD CHINA'S AIR

Nowhere in the world is aviation enjoying such a boom as it is in China today. The belief that Japan's successful invasion of Manchuria and Jehol was due to Nippon's command of the air, awakened China's value of the airplane, both as a military arm and as a means of transportation. General Chiang Kai-shek, former President of the Republic, and Marshal Chang Hsueh-Liang, former war lord of Manchuria, are moving spirits behind the aviation boom. America is the chief beneficiary. During the past year, millions of dollars worth of planes and equipment has been sold to China by U. S. manufacturers. American instructors are teaching young China to fly. Captain Frank Hawks, noted U. S. speed flier, recently delivered a bombing plane to the National Government. If it is regarded as satisfactory, it will be the first of a line of such craft.

Dahlias as Bedding Annuals

COLTNESS HYBRID DAHLIAS ARE EXCELLENT FOR BEDDING AND BORDERS, GROWING ABOUT 18" HIGH

Although the modern large-flowering dahlia is distinctly American in origin and development, European growers, particularly those in England, have accomplished much in making this flower family more versatile. Attention has recently been given toward growing it downward in stature and size of bloom, the success of which has given us a dahlia suitable for bedding which has most of the brilliancy of its more pretentious relative, and has the added advantage of easy culture.

The Coltness hybrid was the forerunner of this series of miniature dahlias, and is now well known, and as easily grown in the amateur garden as the zinnia. It gives an early bloom even when planted as late as May 1, with a wealth of blooms in a long color range, making it a very practical garden flower.

Great improvement through selection has been made in the original Coltness dahlia. Today it rivals the zinnia as a bedding flower, with more refined and ornamental foliage. Its free blooming habit, also, makes it desirable. Quilled types, resembling the cactus dahlia, are to be found in the Coltness strain.

The Coltness dahlias grown from seed are a valuable addition to any garden inasmuch as root slips of favorite colors in a long range may be saved, as with the larger types, and kept over winter to be planted again in the spring. Once started from seed, they may always be saved for an all-summer display the following season. Their single blooms are from 2 to 4 inches in diameter, and with their good stems they make excellent subjects for cutting.

When seed is planted indoors early in the spring, the giant-flowered dahlias may be grown for the garden. This is the way new varieties are found, and who knows, you might be the lucky person to discover some outstanding addition to this beautiful family. In any event, you will have
