NOTICE TO TAXPAYERS
Notice is hereby given that Monday, May 7, 1934 will be the last day to pay your Spring installment of taxes. The county treasurer's office will be open from 8 A. M. to 4 P. M. during the tax paying season. All taxes not paid by that time will be delinquent and a 2% penalty will be added plus interest at the rate of 8% from date of delinquency. Those who have bought or sold property and wish a division of taxes are asked to come in at once. Call on the Auditor for errors and any reductions. The Treasurer can make no corrections.
The Treasurer will not be responsible for the penalty of delinquency taxes resulting from the omission of taxpayers to state definitely on what property they desire to pay. In whose name it may be found in what township or corporation it is situated.
Persons owing delinquent taxes should pay them at once, the law is such that there is no option left for the Treasurer but enforce the collection of delinquent taxes.
County orders will not be paid to anyone owing delinquent taxes. All persons are warned against them.
Particular attention: If you pay taxes in more than one township mention the fact to the Treasurer also see that your receipts call for all your real estate and personal property.
In making inquiries of the Treasurer regarding taxes to insure they do not fall to include return postage.
JOHN WELCHTER
Treasurer Adams County Indiana.

Talkie U. 4 in Court

During a trial in Melbourne, Australia, a judge of the Supreme court listened to a reproduction by a talking picture machine of the noise in a dairy, which neighbors had charged was a nuisance. The "evidence" was so realistic that the idea probably will be used in other trials in Australia.

Old Belief Corrected

Experiments conducted by the army air corps indicate that the popular belief that a person falling from a great altitude will be killed or rendered unconscious before reaching the ground is not correct. A man falling from a great altitude does not necessarily lose consciousness.

POLICE CALLED TO HALT RIOTS IN TWO CITIES

than 40 persons nursed bruised skulls or other minor hurts and 11 were held on rioting charges today after a three-sided Sunday street fight in which two Armenian political factions clashed with each other and 150 policemen battled both groups.

The riot was said to have been precipitated by accusations in connection with the murder in New York last December of Archbishop Leon Elise Tourian.

Police estimated that 300 participated in the battle, marked by an exchange of brickbats, furious fistfuffs, and the wounding of clubs. Women members of the revival political groups fought shoulder to shoulder with their men, and some were among the casualties.

ILLINOIS WILL VOTE TUESDAY

Sitting members, however, have pledged their continued support to the Roosevelt program and their opponents have not expressed any great opposition to it.

Even the Republicans have softened on national issues in their private fights.
Optimistic party leaders predicted that nearly 2,000,000 voters will participate in the primary. In the 1932 primary with a hot three man contest for governor the Democrats pulled a total vote of 816,773 to 1,815,245 for the Republicans. Any similar showing in the election would be considered indications that former Republicans who jumped into the Democratic ranks were there to stay. Previous to the 1932 primary, Democratic primary totals have been approximately 300,000 down state.

All but two of the incumbent congressmen are seeking nominations. Frank Reid, Republican, and J. Earl Vester, Democrat, who resigned to become a federal judge, are not in the campaigns.

One of the hottest fights was taking place in the twentieth Illinois congressional districts where Speaker of the House Henry T. Rainey was being forced to fight opposition within his party. Six of the sitting Democrats do not face opposition for nomination while one Republican is without opposition.

"THE LONE WOLF'S SON" by LOUIS JOSEPH VANCE

SYNOPSIS

Aboard the S.S. "Navarre," bound for America, Michael Lanyard, reformed "Lone Wolf" of crookdom, is reunited with his son whom he thought dead. Lanyard is disappointed to learn that the boy, traveling under the name "Maurice Parry," is a thief, but he hopes his son's interest in Fennel Crozier, lovely daughter of the wealthy Mrs. Fay Crozier, will prove a good influence. Maurice steals the famous Habsburg emeralds from Mrs. Crozier, substituting counterfeiters. Lanyard retrieves the gems for Fay. In a bridge game, Lanyard exposes two gangsters, "Jack Knife" Anderson and "English Archie," for cheating his son. Detective Crane warns Lanyard against their revenge. Soon the emeralds are stolen again and Lanyard is suspected when M. Plon, French detective, and Captain Pascal find the jewels in the latter's trunk, only to learn that they are the counterfeiters. Lanyard is puzzled, for he had returned these to Maurice. Just then the pursuer appears with the genuine emeralds, which were carelessly wrapped and left on his desk with instructions that they be deposited in the safe for Mme. Crozier. Despite the evidence, Lanyard cannot conceive of Maurice planting the zircons (false gems) in his trunk. During lunch, Maurice tells of going to Lanyard's cabin and finding a suspicious acting steward. When the latter left, Maurice saw his father's trunk open and the emerald case planted in full view. To save his father, Maurice replaced the jewels with the zircons. That night, Lanyard is awakened by a thug, who pokes a gun into his ribs and refers to the card game episode.

CHAPTER XVII

"And now that is settled, can we get on with our business?"
"You ain't in no more rush than I am, bo. I'm just here to tell you that we're on."
"On to what?"
"The way you've broke in this son of yours to pull the old Lone Wolf stuff while you keep the high-hat trade kidded. From now on we're in for a fifty-fifty cut on anything you put over—"

"But who, please, are 'we'?"
"Me and the mob I work with—"
"Jack-knife Anderson and English Archie?"
"Ain't so dumb as you let on, are you? And that works both ways; I mean that fifty-fifty cut goes for anything you and the punk get away with that we tip you off to. Like these emeralds, now. When you turn them over, you get your full fifty."

"Your intelligence isn't functioning any too well if you don't know they're with the pursuer."
"You won't get an awful lot on anything we don't know about. We never had no idea of taking the Crozier dame for them jewels before they've been put through the Customs."

"But you mean to when they are?"
"We mean you will, for us. It's too easy for you two, with the old girl so strong for you and the Crozier kid sweet on your punk."

"I see. And if we, if my son and I, refuse—what then?"
The man with the pistol gave a grunt and was for a moment silent as if listening to some noise in the passageway. The pistol remained firmly planted, but Lanyard could see the head vaguely silhouetted against the window-port turn toward the door. Its change of position enabled him to see more, that the face was draped with a cloth below the nose. But whatever the noise that had alarmed the gunman, it apparently was not repeated. His head swung back to Lanyard.

"You ain't goin' to refuse, fella—" not a chance. But if you did do anything foolish like that— We ain't so dumb, either, that we don't know you're dippy about the punk. You go tryin' to r'ar back on us, and right then your boy goes on the spot."

Not because he was unacquainted with the grisly significance of the phrase, but to gain time, Lanyard slowly repeated: "On the spot?"

In the same breath he was aware that the mobman was again inattentive, his alarm this time so far more decided that the pistol slipped an inch or so from its first position. And gathering himself together, Lanyard prepared in simultaneous his knees buckled with his dead weight. Still moving with the most admirable precision and economy, Maurice closed in and caught the body, swung it toward the far end of the room, and pausing only to thrust a hand into one of the coat pockets, threw it from him with all his might.

There was now a rumor of feet and voices in the passageway. Maurice let the silk handkerchief he had worn over his nose fall, and cleverly kicked it under the bed, pulled the front of his dinner jacket together, and had time to flash to his father a reassuring smile before the door was unceremoniously movements to throw himself to one side and seize the wrist.

Before he could put this intention into effect, however, the door to the passageway opened; and the gunman, swinging with a snarl, made to rise and, finding Lanyard on his back the next instant, lurched, lost balance altogether, and went to the floor under his assailant. Thirty seconds or less of blind and frantic scrambling followed, in the course of which the pistol exploded. And as if that had been a set signal, the room was all at once drenched with light.

Lanyard delayed long enough to pin and crush the wrist of the pistol arm till the fingers relaxed and released the weapon. Then, his other hand a vise for the gunman's throat, he looked up.

Maurice stood just inside the door, tearing from his face a dark silk handkerchief worn, like the gunman's as a mask for the lower half.

Eyes lurid with excitement in a face of unnatural pallor took in the tableau on the floor, then the boy laid a finger to his lips and an ear to the door. Turning from this, he cried in a voice at once tense and controlled:

"Up—get up, and let him up! Quick, if you love me—we haven't an instant—"

As Lanyard, transferring his hold to the gunman's collar, rose and hauled him to his feet, Maurice stepped in and swung a wicked right to the fellow's jaw. His head snapped back; his eyes rolled up till only their bloodshot white showed; thrown open. Plon broke in, with one at his heels whom Lanyard recognized as the first officer, and several stewards and sailors for backing.

"You are one minute late, messieurs," Maurice forestalled the agent of the Surete, "that is, if the bandit you see on the floor there is the one you are after. I had to attend to his case in point of self-protection."

Plon discovered the huddled body and gazed at it, his jaw dropping. The first officer answered for him. "It is Mademoiselle Boyce who has just been robbed of a priceless necklace," he announced. "She screamed as the miscreant left her room. That took the attention of the stewards on night duty. They saw him cross the companionway and dart up this passageway. . . . There was a shot heard—"

"Sharp work!" Maurice applauded. "My father and I were chatting when he broke in like a mad beast and threatened us with his pistol. It was plain that he was beside himself with terror—I dared not take any chance with him. So I kicked the pistol out of his hand—that was when it went off—then dropped him with a right hook. At your convenience, messieurs—take him."

While the boy was speaking, Plon crossed to the unconscious gunman and knelt to ransack his clothing. As Maurice finished, the detective fished from one coat pocket a rope of pearls.

JUDGE MURRAY MAY ALSO CITE TWO ATTORNEYS

with Murray and other Lake county officials, came in for bold criticism in the grand jury report on Dillinger's daring break from the "escape proof" jail here.

Smith's power to act as attorney for the grand jurors, whose report was called "scandalous and contemptuous" by Judge Murray, was attacked at the outset of the proceedings.

"You think you have a legal right to appear?" Judge Murray asked.

"I don't know why the grand jury shouldn't have counsel of its own choosing," Smith answered.

"But not by a state's attorney," the judge interrupted.

Smith's explanation that he was not a court officer any longer was met with the argument of the court that he was at the time of the alleged contempt and that he undoubtedly would be a witness in the case.

Judge Murray also said that Barce and Hutchinson might be witnesses or might be forced to prosecute the charges should they be carried to the state supreme court.

"Barce and Hutchinson are officers of Gov. McNutt, who also was severely criticized in this report," Murray said. "The grand jury went clean across the state of Indiana without any provocation to lay part of the responsibility for this break on the executive department."

Chemical Terms
Isomerism refers to substances which are made up of the same chemical elements in the same proportion, but in which the atoms are differently arranged so as to produce substances having different physical and chemical properties. Examples are methyl ether and ethyl alcohol. The formula for both of these is C₂H₆O. Allotropism is the occurrence of the same chemical substance in different forms. For example, carbon appears as a diamond, as charcoal, as graphite, etc.

Mayan Name for Spaniards

The word "Yucatan" is derived from the Mayan word meaning "noise makers," and was applied to the Spaniards by the Mayas because of the noise produced by the Spanish firearms.

Reunion After Murder Trial

The happiness on the face of Andrew Kirwan is mirrored in the face of his mother, Mrs. Jean Nash Dubonnet, in New York Federal court as they are reunited a few moments after a jury had acquitted him of slaying a fellow-passenger on the high seas. Mrs. Dubonnet came from Paris to aid son's defense.

As President Signed Navy Bill

Magic At the White House

There's nothing like a little magic to give spice to a festival; so Ben Thurston, noted magician, adds zest to the White House event by producing white rabbits from the clothing of Sissie and Bill Dill, the President's grandchildren, much to their astonishment and the amusement of the "First Lady."
