NOTICE TO TAXPAYERS—Notice is hereby given that Monday, May 7, 1934 will be the last day to pay your Spring installment of taxes. The county treasurer's office will be open from 8 A. M. to 4 P. M. during the tax paying season. All taxes not paid by that time will become delinquent and a 2% penalty will be added plus interest at the rate of 8% from date of delinquency. Those who have bought or sold property and wish a division of taxes waived to come in at once. Call on the Auditor for errors and any reductions. The Treasurer can make no corrections.

The Treasurer will not be responsible for the penalty of delinquent taxes resulting from the omission of taxpayers to state definitely on what property they desire to pay. In whose name it may be found in what township or corporation it is situated.

Persons owing delinquent taxes should pay them at once, the law is such that there is no option left for the Treasurer but enforce the collection of delinquent taxes.

County orders will not be paid to anyone owing delinquent taxes. All persons are warned against them. Particular attention. If you pay taxes in more than one township mention the fact to the Treasurer also see that your receipts call for all your real estate and personal property.

In making inquiries of the Treasurer regarding taxes to insure repayment do not fail to include return postage.

THE LONE WOLF'S SON

by LOUIS JOSEPH VANCE

SYNOPSIS

Aboard the S.S. "Navarre," bound for New York, Michael Lanyard, reformed "Lone Wolf" and underworld celebrity, is reunited with his son whom he thought dead. The boy, "Maurice," a society of Tess Boyce for his son, but Lanyard hopes his son's interest in Fenn Crozier, lovely daughter of the wealthy Mrs. Crozier, will prove a good influence. Maurice steals Mrs. Crozier's Habsburg emeralds. Lanyard retrieves them for Fay. Detective Crane warns Lanyard to watch out for the vengeance of "Jack Knife" Anderson and "English Archie," two gunmen whom Lanyard exposed for cheating Maurice at cards. Shortly afterwards, the gangsters steal Mrs. Crozier's emeralds and plant them in Lanyard's cabin. Maurice saves his father by substituting imitations and secretly placing the emeralds in the purser's care for Fay. Notwithstanding Lanyard's innocence, Detective Plon is suspicious of him. Later, when one of "Jack Knife's" accomplices tries to intimidate Lanyard into stealing the emeralds and splitting fifty-fifty with the gang, Maurice appears on the scene, masked. He knocks the gangster unconscious, planting a string of pearls stolen from the notorious gold-digger, Tess Boyce, in the thug's pocket. Tess, in gratitude to Maurice for catching the thief, gives a dinner in his honor. Lanyard disapproves of the society of Tess Boyce for his son, but Fenn asks him to leave Maurice to her. Discussing the Boyce robbery, Plon informs Lanyard that the prisoner swore Lanyard and Maurice planted the necklace on him. Later, Lanyard meets Tess and admires her courage in wearing her diamonds after last night's robbery, suggesting it might be safer to leave them with the purser. "Too much bother," Tess replies.

CHAPTER XXI

She broke off her statement to sign a denial to Maurice, who was waiting to ask her to dance. "No, thanks, nice thing. I'd rather stay here and make up to your old man. Grab yourself an armful of Estelle there, and give it a whirl instead." "There's no accounting for tastes, of course." The boy sketched an impish salute. "The loss, madame, is yours." "Groat kid," Tess Boyce drawled, watching him lead the other young woman away to the music, "and one dream of a dancer, if I'm any judge. Look how light he is on his dogs. . . . Funny thing about last night," she harked back: "I wasn't asleep, really, just dozing; and all of a sudden I had a sort of feeling there was somebody else in the room. If you know what I mean; and I opened my eyes, and there was. He was stooping over my dressing-table, where I'd left a lot of this junk—to tired to put it away. Honest, I couldn't believe my eyes—it seemed so cheeky, I thought I must be dreaming. On for a moment, though—only till he switched off the night-light. He must've sensed I'd waked up, I guess, though I hadn't stirred a finger or breathed hard or anything, because he didn't stop a second—just blacked that light out and took it on the lam. And then I cut loose."

"You were able to identify the prisoner, then?"

"The eyes that widened to Lanyard's were almost too guileless. 'If they hadn't caught him with the goods on, I'd never've believed it was the same fellow.'"

"I see; he darkened the room too quickly."

"Not so quick that I didn't get a snapshot of a man a head taller, anyway, than the yegg you and your son helped pinch. Putting out the night-light didn't make such a difference, you see—it was so dim and the moon so bright. I could see him like a silhouette, if you know what I mean, between me and the windows, as he followed for the door. I'd never have believed the gorilla they found my pearls on could have roved like that—silent as a shadow, sure-footed as a cat, and graceful—I couldn't think of a thing but a panther."

"Yes," Lanyard nodded, without flinching from the stare of those wonder-struck eyes. "Only a few minutes ago, oddly enough, M. Plon and I were speaking of the unreliability of eyewitnesses, how excitement invariably colors and distorts the evidence of our senses at critical moments."

"Wouldn't it slay you? Why, if it hadn't turned out the way it did, if they'd left it to me to pick out the burglar out of a line-up of passers, I'd have bet my left leg it was that hopeful of yours, just going on the way he walks."

"Then he is fortunate indeed."

"I see what you mean." The woman of a sudden sloughed her show of naïveté: the wide eyes narrowed and gave out wicked glimmers; the wide mouth went into its

"Figure to yourself that I have every confidence in you. Make yourself at ease, my friend, and when the spirit moves you, more lucid."

"I only want to know what you know, if anything." Crane draped himself on the foot of the bed and tapped his pipe with a vague air which Lanyard took to screen keen observation. "About this kid of yours and the Boyce outfit: What's the idea of all this fuss they're makin' over him?"

"But you already know, I am sure, about the service Maurice did Madame—"

"Yeah, I heard about it. I'm just

"If they hadn't caught him with the goods on, I'd never've believed it was the same fellow," said Boyce.

wickedest twist. "Because he's the Lone Wolf's son."

"I'm afraid that would have counted against him, had Fate left it to you to identify the thief."

"Sure would. He just don't know his luck. I'm pretty easy-going, monsieur, if you know what I mean; but if I hadn't got that rope back! Why, they're just everything I've got to remember my last husband by, those pearls, and some fancy black-and-blue spots that are almost faded out already."

The thin asetic lips of Mr. Isquith, a taciturn third party to the talk, writhed in mild anguish; and the Boyce, marking this, gave way to gusty mirth.

Lanyard seized the first excuse he could, with good grace, to withdraw his person as well as his mind from the party. And as soon as he was out of sight, Isquith leaned his prim mouth to the Boyce's ears.

"Nice work, kid," he breathed, "—very, very pretty! The way you got the wind up the old fox was a treat. Keep it up, now, that's a good girl; don't let him forget a minute he's sitting on a powder-barrel and monkeying with matches; play him off against the punk—and we've got 'em where we want 'em, him and his whelp, right in the hollows of our little hot hands."

Smart knuckles on his stateroom door hailed Lanyard back, hours later, from the far horizon where waking consciousness dips under. Full-witted in a twinkling, he made a light, then sensibly demanded through the panels to know what was wanted. No name passed in response, but the nasal deliberation of the voice outside sounded authentic. With no more hesitation he drew the bolt. A grin of apology wreathed the pipe in Crane's teeth as he entered.

"Don't bawl me out for ruinin' your night's rest," he begged, and re-shot the bolt himself as Lanyard went back to bed. "I just figured I'd better give you this buzz before the tip-off, if any. I may be wrong; but if I'm right, the less confabulation I and you do behind closed doors from now on, the better."

a back number, of course, and nobody ever tells me anything."

"But you have been invisible all day—busy with your own affairs, presumably; one has had no chance for a chat with you."

"O. K. But it's hard to forget old habits. I can't seem to break myself of pickin' up pieces that people leave about, careless-like, and fittin' them together. I've got a pretty good idea of what happened in here last night. Every time I think about it," Crane with iron gravity professed, "I bust right out laughin'."

"Laughing?"

"At the idea of a lad barely out of his teens tackling a tough egg like Eddie the Frog, knockin' him for a goal and fishin' a mess of stolen pearls out of his poke."

"To be accurate, it was that good Plon who found them."

"It would have been," Crane with ambiguous readiness agreed. "He had to do something, naturally, to cop himself a piece of credit. These French dicks are the hottest ever, to hear them tell it—it wouldn't have looked right to let an amateur up and pry him right out of the picture."

"You do not like M. Plon, I take it?"

"I don't think as much of him as he does, that's a fact. And what he thinks of me is nobody's business."

"You are—if the question is not indiscreet—professionally at odds, then?"

"It isn't that, so much," Crane said with an utterly open face, "as that he'd thank me to 'tend to my own knittin'. That ruckus last night wouldn't have come off if he hadn't been up-stage with me. I tried to wise him that Jack-knife and English Archie probably had heels planted somewhere on board, but he wouldn't listen. That sort of thing was likely enough, he admitted, on an American ship or maybe a British; but—dirty work on decks that were legally the same as the sacred soil of that dear France! 'Monahoo A-may-ray-caine was pleased to be comical'."
