Colt Club Committee Will Hold Meetings

The Gold Medal Colt Club committee is planning two meetings for Friday, June 8, in both these meetings five or more colts nominated last July will be brought together, and those attending will be given an opportunity to judge the colts. After they have been placed, P. T. Brown of the animal husbandry department of Purdue will place the colts and give the reasons. Feeding, care, and management of colts will also be discussed in both these meetings. Dan D. Kauffman will have charge of the meeting in the north part of the county and Leon Neuenschwander and Frank Hagberger will have charge of the meeting

"MA CINDERELLA" by Harold Bell Wright

SYNOPSIS

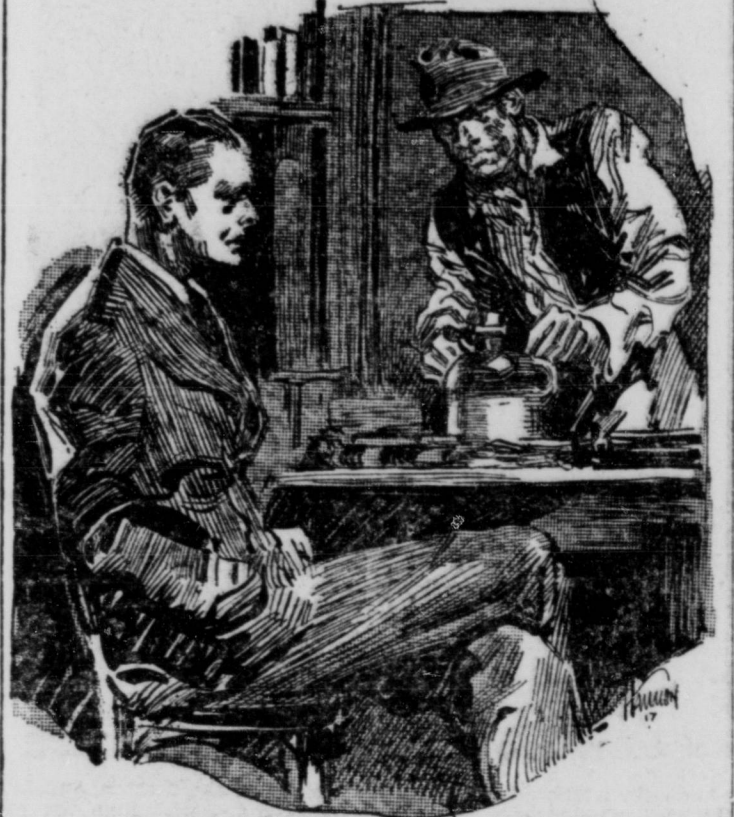

Ann Haskel, taciturn, independent mountaineer, rules the little village of Pine Knob, in the Ozarks, with an iron hand. Though generally considered hard and unbending, Ann could also be extremely generous. A hard-working farmer herself, Ann disapproves of the useless life led by the wealthy vacationists at the Lodge. Among these, however, is one exception—Diane Carrol, lovely young artist, whose work means more to her than her wealth; yet Ann considers Diane's painting a waste of time. The latter, however, greatly admires the mountain woman, who sacrificed her own happiness for her son's future. Years before, following the death of her first husband, Ann had placed her boy, John Herbert, in the care of an old friend, Judge Shannon, so that he might be educated properly. She has not seen John Herbert since. In his place, she raised a ne'er-do-well stepson, Jeff Todd. Then, one day, John Herbert unexpectedly returns. Diane happens to be at the station when he arrives and offers the stranger a lift. They are trapped in the woods by heavy rains and forced to spend the night there. John Herbert confides in Diane that, although he studied law, his heart is in writing and he hopes his mother will not be disappointed. Thrown together as they are, a comradeship is formed such as Diane had never before experienced. Next morning, Ann comes to the rescue. John Herbert is stunned when Diane introduces the crude mountaineer as his mother. The latter, hiding her emotions, coldly says: "I loved you war Herb when I first ketched sight of you." Months later, Nance Jordan, Ann's housekeeper, is fondly arranging John Herbert's desk when she catches Jeff, sneaking into his room with a jug of liquor. She reminds him of Ann's warning that her son must not learn of the still. Just then, John Herbert appears, and Jeff, glaring at him with hatred and envy, insinuates that it isn't eggs that Ann supplies to the Lodge. Nance orders Jeff out.

CHAPTER XVII

"I don't aim to hurry myself none, Nance Jordan," Jeff retorted, and, rising, jug in hand, he approached the book-corner. Nance drew back a little, but held herself in tense readiness. The backwoodsman set his jug on the table with an emphatic thud. "Have a drink?" The young man looked up. "Oh, hello, Jeff," he said, pleasantly. Jeff's eyes were narrow slits of evil light. His voice was charged with venom. "I said, have a drink." John Herbert glanced at the jug, put his pencil down, and sat back in his chair. Looking up with smiling composure into the native's scowling face, he said, politely: "Thanks, old man, but you must excuse me." "What air you a-meanin' by that?" he demanded the other. Still smiling, John Herbert explained, "I don't care for a drink just now, Jeff." "What's the matter with that licker?" "Nothing—so far as I know." "You're durned tootin' that ain't nothin' the matter with hit. That ain't no better nowhar in these hys Ozarks." "The matter appears to substantiate the truth of your assertions," the young man agreed, dryly. "What?" "I am willing to accept your judgment as to the quality of your liquor." "I'm tellin' you hit's good." "It certainly is potent." "I know what's the matter with you; you ain't drinkin' 'cause hit's me what's askin' you." "Oh, come now, Jeff, don't be like that." "Wal, that that's the way I be. I know what you're a-thinkin'. We uns ain't good 'nough fer you an' your kind over to the Lodge. We uns is jest hill-billies. Ain't fitten fer sich as you-all to drink with ner live with ner work with ner nothin'—jest hill-billies. When you aim in' to be'p me with the hayin'?" "What makes you think I am ever going to help you?" "My Gawd-a-mighty! You ain't aimin' to keep right on doin' nothin', be you? Ain't you fingerin' on goin' to work, ever?" Ann Haskel's son looked thoughtfully toward his books and papers on the table. Then, slowly, his troubled eyes took in the living-room with its utter lack of any saving touch of refinement or beauty. "I wonder," he murmured, sadly. "Perhaps you are right, Jeff." He dropped his head in moody silence. "You ain't so mighty much," challenged the other. "I'm plum' sick of you an' your book l'arin' an' your high an' mighty ways. I'm a better man than you any way you want to take me." John Herbert did not even look at the belligerent backwoodsman. He seemed, indeed, to have forgotten that he was not alone. Jeff Todd was puzzled. There was something here which was foreign to all his experience. In the backwoodsman's set, when a gentleman assumed the tone and manner which he was exhibiting toward Ann Haskel's son it was customary for the one so approached to pay strict attention. Nance Jordan understood the ethics of the occasion perfectly and moved to a position of safety. But John Herbert seemed to have not the least idea of what it was all about. Apparently he was brooding over something entirely apart from the business which Jeff so pointedly desired him to consider. The baffled Jeff consulted Nance with a look of bewildered inquiry. She motioned for him to cease interrupting John Herbert's thoughts and take himself elsewhere. Suddenly Jeff sought counsel of his jug. Wiping his mouth with the back of his hand, he bent another ferocious look upon the indifferent pug. Moving as if to extend the jug toward the other, he hesitated and withdrew the half-offered courtesy. Deliberately he turned and, crossing the room, carefully placed his liquor in a place of safety. Nance spoke in a fierce whisper. "Jeff Todd, don't you dast pick a fight with him. If you do you'll die, sure as ever you war borned." "Shucks!" retorted the other in the same guarded tone. "I've whipped better men than he'll ever be an' didn't even know I'd been a-fightin'. Look at him! He's skeered stiff right now." "He ain't, neither, skeered. He jest ain't a-mindin' you, that's all—no more'n if you war a skeeter a-buzzin' 'round." "I'll larn him to mind 'bout me," returned Jeff, savagely. "I've done quit buzzin'; now I'm a-going to bite." He started purposefully toward the unmindful John Herbert, when a gay laugh from outside the house interrupted.

"Diane!" He sprang to his feet. "Lord! but it's good to see you." One would have thought he had not seen her for ages. Certainly no one would have guessed they had spent the evening before together in a canoe on the moonlit river. "What's the trouble?" she smiled. "Won't your sonnet tell? Has your muse given you the gate? Take my advice and ignore the wench. She'll come back if you treat her with proper indifference." Jeff and Nance, at the other end of the room, listened open-mouthed with wonder to this strange talk. John Herbert smiled ruefully. "I have about concluded that Jeff is right. I should be plowing corn, making hay, killing hogs, or chopping wood. I can't write. I'm just one of your despised 'dabblers,' Diane."

Jeff's eyes were narrow slits of evil light. His voice was charged with venom. "I said, have a drink."

The laugh was followed by the appearance of Diane Carrol's head and shoulders in the open window not three feet from where the last of the Haskels was sitting. For reasons which she could not have explained satisfactorily even to herself, Bill Carrol's daughter had sent another telegram to her butler, telling him that she had decided to remain some time longer in the Ozarks. "Snap out of it, Sir Poet," cried the artist, cheerfully. "You can't afford to indulge in the dumps on a morning like this." Ann Haskel was magical. Indifferent he might be to the significance of Jeff Todd's manner, but there was no lack of interest in his face as he looked at the girl framed in the open window.

He looked at her doubtfully. "You are laughing at me!" John Herbert was never quite sure whether she was laughing at him or not. "I stopped on my way back from the post-office for the express purpose of inviting you," she retorted. "Of course, if you don't wish to go—"

THIMBLE THEATER

Fascist King of Bulgaria Fighting Ruler

King Boris, who is believed to have inspired the coup d'etat that placed Bulgaria under a Fascist dictatorship, is one of the few fighting monarchs left in the world. Since he succeeded his father, King Ferdinand in 1918, he has been kept busy quelling internal strife. Attempts on his life have been frequent, and he has declared he would rather be a working man in America than a king, he steadfastly refused to step off the throne. He is a prime favorite with the Bulgarian army and, more important, with Mussolini of Italy. King Boris' marriage to Princess Giovanna of Italy in 1930 is said to have been a political understanding with Rome. Bulgaria's royal couple have one child, Princess Marie.

Dairy Herd Members Plan Meetings June 6

The Dairy Herd Improvement Association members and their friends are invited to attend a series of meetings Wednesday, June 6, at places where liming has been done and where they will see the effects of this treatment on the clover stand. These meetings will be held in the north part of the county as this is where the most of this work has been done. The places for the meetings will be announced later this week. Some of the fields will show the benefits of lime sludge from the sugar pond and others the effects of fine crushed limestone. Specialists from the dairy department and from the soils and crops department of Purdue will take part in these meetings.

Sweetest Corn Is June Planted

An ancient legend declares that the sweetest corn is that planted in June. Whether there is any truth in the legend or not, June planted corn makes the fastest growth and produces high quality crops. Unseasonable weather over vast stretches of the country has made corn planting late, both in farms and gardens, but there should be no delay in planting sweet corn. The second or third crop ought to be going in now under ordinary conditions. Don't forget to plant in squares instead of long rows for better filled ears. American gardeners have been accustomed to plant things and let nature take its course, trusting to the natural fertility of the soil. European gardeners use every well and art to make the soil and the vegetable produce to its utmost. Planting corn in squares so the pollen will get the freest possible distribution and produce the fullest ears with the most kernels on the cob is the best plan. Whichever way the wind blows pollen will be blown through the patch. Each silk must have its pollen to produce a kernel. Ground in June is mellow and more easily worked than earlier in the spring. Give it good deep preparation and pulverize it fine for the corn patch. Spade in plenty of fertilizer. Corn is a high feeder you have to sell.
