Slain Coyote Wore Bell

Lewiston, Ida.—(U.P.)—A belled coyote, slain here recently, is believed to have been the pet of "H. H. Burns, Ore." as that inscription was found imprinted inside the bell. Burns is 400 miles from here, indicating the animal probably traveled the distance in wandering since its youth when the sheep bell was placed about its neck.

New Plan Aids Apple Growers
Hood River, Ore.—(U.P.)—News that France abandoned the plan of requiring each apple and pear exported to her ports be enclosed in a wrapper bearing the name of its origin, has been well received in this fruit growing center. The "wrapper plan" assertedly was to have been in retaliation for a ruling fostered by American wine interests to force French exporters to specify on each bottle wrapper the origin of every bottle of wine.

WHY IS THE DROUGHT?

Why is the weather? Is the climate changing? Is our Middle West doomed to become a Sahara? Does the weather average up? Where does the rainfall come from? Why are certain sections of the U. S. wetter or dryer than others? Where is the region of greatest precipitation in the U. S.? Least precipitation? Why? Where is it hottest and where coldest in the U. S.? What factors control weather in various parts of the U. S.? All these and scores more interesting questions about weather, rainfall, climate are contained in our Washington Bureau's 5,000 word bulletin THE WEATHER. It tells in non-technical language exactly what the weather scientists' problems are. Fill out the coupon below and send for it:

"MA CINDERELLA" by Harold Bell Wright

CHAPTER XXV.

Returning the certificates to Ann the lawyer asked: "Did you and your husband, Edward Haskell, continue to reside in Greenville, Kentucky, after your marriage?"

"Not long we didn't. We-uns moved to Cowley County, Illinois."

"Your sister Grace and her husband, Henry Haskell—did they remain in Greenville?"

"No, sir; we-all moved together—worked a farm together in Cowley County on shares for 'bout two year. Then we-all moved to Price County, Missouri—northern part of the state hit war. Farm rents wasn't so high in Missouri as they'd get to be in Illinois. We war in Price County four year—had two farms thar, but they war only 'bout a mile apart, so we-uns could be close neighbors like we'd allus been."

"Any children?"

"Grace had a girl-baby. Hit died. I didn't have none—not then."

"I realize how painful some of your memories must be, Mrs. Haskell," said Levering, gently, "but it is quite necessary for you to relate them. Your sister's husband died in Price County, Missouri?"

The mountain woman spoke now in a stony monotone: "Henry Haskell war hung fer killin' a man. You got hit all down in your papers thar, I reckon. The killin' war over a hoss deal. Henry he allus war quarrelsome when he war drinkin', which had got to be most of the time after we went to Missouri. He wasn't like his cousin Ed. Ed he war sober an' steady. He most allus could manage Henry, too, when thar war any trouble."

"Go on, please."

"After her man war tuck, Grace she come to live with me an' Ed. We-uns war all the kin she had."

"Yes?"

"Soon's hit war all over 'bout Henry, we-uns moved away from thar; went to west Kansas—away out in the short-grass country—an' tried dry farmin'. But, shucks! couldn't nobody make a livin' in sich a country, an' we come back to Missouri to keep from starvin' to death. Barry County hit war this time—down in the southwest part—nigh the Oklahoma line. Hit war in Kansas Grace died."

"Where war your boy, John Herbert, born, Mrs. Haskell?"

"John Herbert he war borned in Kansas, too."

"How long did you and your husband and the boy remain in Barry County?"

"We war thar 'bout two year. Then we come hyar. We settled, first, over on yon side the river on Clear Creek. We war a-doin' right well, me an' Ed an' little Herb. Then a tree fell on Ed an' killed him. Thar warn't nobody left but me an' my boy. Hit's like I tell you, mister—John Herbert air the last of the Haskells."

The lawyer, in his precise way, said: "From the available records we have established the marriages in Greenville, Kentucky, and the death of Henry Haskell in Price County, Missouri, we have traced the movements of the two families as you have given them. The death of your husband, Edward, is, of course, easily proven. But there is no record—no official record, I mean, of the death of your sister Grace. And there is no record of the birth of your son, John Herbert. Please understand, madam, that I am not doubting the truth of your statements, but as a matter of legal form—purely as a matter of form—can you substantiate by living witnesses what you have told me?"

Ann Haskell's dark eyes were fixed upon her backwoods companion. Slowly she said: "Nance Jordan hyer knows all about hit. She war livin' with we-uns when my sister died an' when my boy war borned."

"Good!" exclaimed the lawyer, turning to Nance. If he noticed the woman's fright, he attributed it to her quite evident backwoods ignorance.

"Your name, please?"

"Nance Jordan hyer knows all about hit. She war livin' with we-uns when my sister died an' when my boy war borned."

"You not?" the lawyer continued. "You can testify of your own knowledge that this woman is Ann Haskell, the wife of Edward Haskell and the mother of John Herbert Haskell?"

Ann Haskell's dark eyes never left her backwoods companion's face. Slowly Nance answered, "I sure can, mister."

The attorney put his papers carefully away in the briefcase.

"Mrs. Haskell," he said, with a smile, "I congratulate you."

"You what?"

"I am pleased to inform you, madam, that you are the heir to a very substantial fortune."

"My Gawd-a-mighty," gasped Nance.

Ann Haskell said, slowly, "I reckon you'd best tell me 'bout hit, mister."

"John Haskell, the father of your husband, Edward, was, as you said, in business. Among other small interests he traded in a small way in real-estate. He died in Holmsburg, Pennsylvania. At the time of his death he was in possession of a tract of apparently worthless land. He had purchased this land, believing it to be oil land, and although the development which he expected did not occur during his lifetime, his faith in the property was so strong that he placed it in trust with our company for his heirs. He was a widower at the time of his death."

"The terms of the trust were unusual. John Haskell was, I am told, somewhat eccentric. In fact, his prediction as to the ultimate value of his property was generally held to prove his—ah—peculiarities. In

Ladybirds in London-Australia Air Race

Among the early entrants in the MacRobertson International Air Race from London to Melbourne, Australia, next Fall, is Jacqueline Cochrane, Pensacola, Fla., beauty, who left the New York beauty shop the opera, win a pilot's license after three weeks' training for a bet of $200. Miss Cochrane will fly a special plane built for her at Springfield, Mass. It is capable of 250-miles-an-hour cruising speed and has a non-stop range of 3,000 miles. But Miss Cochrane will have stiff competition from members of her own sex, including Louise Thaden holder of many women's air records; Miss Laura Ingalls, who flew 15,000 miles solo across South America this year, and Amy Johnson Mollison, English aviatrix, who set a record from London to Australia and later flew across the Atlantic with her husband, Captain Jim Mollison.

WHAT IS HOME WITHOUT A GARDEN?

Rock Garden Annuals

Rock gardening has assumed a position of such importance that consideration of annuals to maintain color during the summer months is a question of garden efficiency. For the most part, the glory of the rock garden has departed by the end of June. The great races of plants that require rock garden treatment for their best success are spring bloomers. By the judicious use of annuals of short and tufted growth color may be maintained during the entire season.

Care must be taken not to introduce too heavy growing annuals which might smother some of the rarer perennial subjects. Seed should be sown fairly late in the spring by merely scattering it on bare patches among the rock plants.

First in importance of these tiny plants in popular esteem is the tiny rock cress, juncopisidum acaule, a three-inch miniature with lovely lilac flowers. It comes into bloom quickly and goes out quickly. A supply of seed to scatter every now and then will be useful. California has given us a number of bright little annuals for the rock garden, and one of the prettiest and best known of these is baby blue eyes or nemophila.

The old-fashioned portulaca or rose moss makes a surprisingly effective plant scattered between the stones in a walk, particularly if laid in crazy paving style. It is also useful on the hottest and drying portions of the rock garden.

A little jewel is the leptosiphon giving a variety of bright coloring in size and growth in keeping with rock plants.

The violas raised from seed, especially those of the gracilis and cornuta types, will bloom late in the season from spring sown seed and may be used to produce fine color effects in the rock garden. Some of the dwarf phlox drummondii may be introduced to give a brilliant splash of color. Nierembergia gracilis is another excellent garden tool; and many other articles not listed.
