Eighteen Drums Of Cresote Available

A. W. Trippel, extension specialist of Purdue, and County agent Archbold made a short tour about the county this morning to look over the chinch bug situation. According to Mr. Trippel, specialists are unable to make any predictions this year because the bugs do not seem to run true to their former habits. He states, however, that corn that has been seriously damaged should be thoroughly destroyed and an attempt made to trap such bugs as can be trapped.

Eighteen drums of cresote still remain at the Farm Bureau station at Berne, and it is thought possible that this will be needed at once cutting time to protect the corn. There seems to be a lot of chinch bugs in the oats in various stages of development and Mr. Archbold suggests that everyone examine oats to learn the extent of infestation, and if they feel they need the cresote, it may be secured from J. D. Winterregg, Farm Bureau Station, Berne, Indiana.

Seifert Vail, former opera singer, is stabbed to death in Lakeside Cottage of exclusive Sherwood Forest Sanatorium. Vail brooded constantly over his wife's death. He continuously played the phonograph record "Waiting For You," his wedding theme sung in his own voice. This record was playing at the time of his death. A maid discovered Vail's body when she went into his room to turn off the record. Willis Clendening, Milton Cross and James Ruxton, the millionaire, shared the cottage with Vail. Ruxton's favorite nephew and heir, Loren Ruxton, and Dr. John Calvert are rivals for the affections of Sue Faraday, a nurse. Mark Hillier, the playwright, crippled from arthritis and bored by the monotony of sanatorium life, welcomes a little excitement. He sends his secretary, Bob Fowler, to investigate the trouble at Lakeside Cottage. It is discovered that Vail's room has a private entrance which opens directly on the grounds. Dr. Calvert claims Vail had been dead an hour before the photograph started playing. Sheriff Dave Finn arrives. Ruxton changed rooms with Vail the day before as Vail was expecting a guest he was anxious to receive secretly, which the private entrance in Ruxton's room afforded. Clendening discloses that Vail received a letter from New York two days before his death. The police locate some photographs but no letter. An empty revolver is found in Vail's room. Felipa, the maid, is questioned.

CHAPTER X
"You didn't leave your room?"

"No, sir, never while it is rest period. I might wake up the patients."

"Did you hear any sounds in Vail's room during the rest period?"

Felipa hesitated. Then she answered nervously, "I think once I hear somebody walking in the room."

"Did you hear anything outside?"

"No, sir."

"Did you see anything through your window?"

"What time was it when you heard the noise?"

"I do not know, Mr. Sheriff. I say to myself it is just Mr. Vail, and I go on reading."

The sheriff paused, and Clendening interposed a question. His voice was disarmingly gentle.

"How did you know Mr. Vail had been murdered Felipa?" he asked.

"I can see he is dead," she said. "His face is white, and he lies so still."

"But how did you know he'd been murdered? Did you raise the sheet that covered him, or touch him?"

There was a genuine terror in her eyes now. She seemed to sense that she had made some mistake, but she did not know what it was.

She whispered, "No," and then moistened her lips with her tongue. Clendening's voice became hard and triumphant.

"You ran out screaming that Mr. Vail had been killed. How did you know it? Come on, Felipa, tell the sheriff how you knew it?"

"I—I can see he is dead," she faltered.

Clendening turned to Finn. "Mr. Ruxton and I went in the room as soon as Felipa had run out. We didn't know Vail had been murdered until we pulled down the top sheet. It was caught under his shoulder and stretched tight to his knees, so that it didn't touch his body, and there wasn't a drop of blood on it. But Felipa knew he had been murdered, even though she couldn't see any evidence of it. Smart girl, isn't she, sheriff?"

"How did you know it?" Finn shouted at her. "Because you did it, I guess. He was killed with a knife, and that's just what a greaser would use."

The girl looked at him in terror. She uttered a choking cry and fainted.

It was Dr. Calvert who picked her up and carried her into her room. Indignation and disgust were plainly written on his face. I looked up and saw Ruxton standing in his doorway, looking on in dismay. But, indignant though we were at Clendening's maliciousness and the sheriff's brutality, I am certain we were all convinced that Felipa had some undisclosed reason for believing that Vail had been murdered. I did not for a moment believe her capable of that reasoned, subtle murder, and I do not believe the sheriff did, but certainly she was concealing something.

The doctor came out of her room and said quietly to Finn, "She's recovered consciousness, sheriff, but I'd appreciate it if you would let her rest for a few minutes." He turned to Clendening, who was pale with excitement. "If the sheriff is through with you, Mr. Clendening, I think you had better go to bed. You've had far too much excitement and exertion this afternoon."

"I'm perfectly all right," Clendening protested, but he arose reluctantly and, with a resentful scowl at the doctor, went to his room and banged the door behind him.

"The girl is nervous and imaginative," James Ruxton remarked, with a troubled frown. "It's possible she had an intuition that Vail had been killed."

"There's something more than that," Finn said grimly. "She's holding back something, but I'll get it out of her." He turned to Calvert. "Talk to Mr. Cross, where is he? I'll talk to him and give him time to decide that she'd better come through."

Dr. Calvert took him to Cross's room. James Ruxton retired again. When the doctor returned I recalled that he had known Vail for several years and that once he had been the murdered man's physician. I said in awkward sympathy, "This must be difficult for you, doctor. It's difficult," he said, and then he relaxed. "Oh, yes, I see what you mean. It is damned awkward. The reporters will be after us soon. Unless Finn clears up the murder quickly, the publicity's going to ruin Sherwood Forest."

"Oh," I said. He heard the disapproval in my tone. "It's possible she had an intuition that Vail had been killed."

"Vail's dead," he said defensively. "We can't bring him back to life. Why not be realistic then? It won't help Vail to upset all the patients and perhaps drive them away."

"I was thinking of justice," I answered.

"So am I. I hope Finn catches the murderer. I hope to God he catches him soon."

His voice had risen. His nerves had been rasped, like mine. He added in a low voice, "Sorry, I was rude, Mr. Fowler. As you said, it's unpleasant for me—for everyone. It isn't comfortable to think that a murderer's walking around among us."

"Finn came out of Cross's room, followed by the patient's querulous voice: 'Now don't come back again, because I won't talk to you. I won't be disturbed like this. I'm a sick man!'"

The sheriff closed the door gently and made a grimace at us. He said to Dr. Calvert, "Is it o.k. to talk to the maid again?"

"Give her a few minutes," the doctor said. "She'll be here whenever you want her."

The sheriff sat down heavily, pulled a cigar from his pocket and lit it. The front door opened and seem to run true to their former habits. He states, however, that corn that has been seriously damaged should be thoroughly destroyed and an attempt made to trap such bugs as can be trapped.

been "playgrounds" of the Dillinger gang for several months. Department of justice agents have been posted at several spots since the gang fled from an ambush at Spider Lake, Wis., after killing a federal operative.

Dillinger's red-haired sweetheart, Marion Evelyn Frechette, formerly lived at Sheboygan, 35 miles east of here on Lake Michigan.

The wrecked, bullet-marked car bore Indiana license plates stolen at Neenah, Wis., several weeks ago.

Undersheriff G. W. Booth, accompanied by Policemen Robert Shiels and Anton Rafanstein, started in pursuit of the second "bandit car" after learning of the crash.

As they overtook the speeding car, they reported, a man stuck a sub-machine gun out of the right window and began firing.

"Bullets glazed the top of our car and then a man on the other side of the bandit's automobile started firing with a second machine gun," Booth said.

"We emptied our revolvers at them and I believe we hit one of them in the arm."

He said he believed a woman and two men were in the rear seat and two men in front. They also reported what appeared to them to be the body of a man on the running board.

Sheriff George Freund, after talking with several witnesses, told the United Press he doubted whether Dillinger was involved in the escapade.

Melvin H. Purvis, head of the department of justice "Dillinger detail" in Chicago, sent agents here to investigate.

County Agent Notes

From records to date the first second brood codling moth sprays should be applied in the northern half of Indiana as follows:

Noblesville south to Indianapolis July 4, 6.

Fort Wayne south July 6, 8.

Extreme north end of State July 9, 11.

The codling moth is abundant throughout the State and second brood sprays are essential. At least two second brood sprays are recommended. The second, second brood spray should be applied 10 days to two weeks after the first second brood cover spray. If only one second brood spray is applied, it will probably be advisable to delay it 3 to 5 days later than indicated above the catch the peak of worms.

Since there will be a more or less continuous hatch of worms until September or later, present observations indicate the need of continuously protecting fruit over the entire period in heavily infested orchards.
