

CLASSIFIED ADVERTISEMENTS, BUSINESS CARDS, AND NOTICES

FOR SALE

FOR SALE—9 room house with basement, modern except furnace, West Monroe street, Bargain. 5 room semi-modern house near G. E. at bargain. Inquire at Democrat office. 182-g3ix

FOR SALE—Chester White male hog, a good one. D. A. Helm, phone 881-K Route 3, Decatur. 184-g3ix

WANTED

WANTED—To rent small house, rent reasonable. Write Box X-12. 182-g3ix

For RADIO or ELECTRICAL repairs call MARCELLUS MILLER phone 625. I specialize in auto radio installation and repairs. Miller Radio Service, 226 No. 7th st. 172it

LOST AND FOUND

LOST—A Lady's white kid slipper. Finder please return to this office. 183-g3it

FOR RENT

FOR RENT—No. 1—Dairy plant with ice machine and refrigerator, near Decatur. No. 2—Modern brick residence, large garden, pasture field, small orchard, near business section of Decatur, Indiana, known as the Studebaker Home-stead. A. D. Suttles, Agent. 183-g3it

Clean Out Your Radiator with HOFFMAN RADIATOR CLEANER

ENGLAND'S AUTO PARTS

1st Door So. of Court House Phone 282

NOTICE—We are now located at 112 West Monroe St. Specials on Brother and Sister suits the rest of the week. We do dress-making, hemstitching and buttonholes. Vitz Gift Shop, phone 925. 182-g3it

Test Your Knowledge

Can you answer five of these ten questions? Turn to page Four for the answers.

1. Name the Vice-President of the U. S. under Rutherford B. Hayes.
2. Name the Governor of Pennsylvania.
3. What is legumen vitae?
4. Where is the city of Peiping?
5. What is the proper way to address a woman chairman of a meeting?
6. Who wrote "The Rosary"?
7. Where is the University of Maine?
8. Where is Clinton Prison?
9. Name the U. S. Secretary of State.
10. What is phonetics?

Rally Day Sunday At Decatur Church

Next Sunday will be rally day for the interest of young people at the First Evangelical Church, Francis W. Pritchard, a graduate of Purdue University, and now a student in the Boston School of Theology, Boston, Mass., will be the speaker for the day. He will preach at both morning and evening services. Mr. Pritchard has a great message for young people in this modern world situation. The public is cordially invited to hear him at 10:15 and 7:30.

MAG CLEAN

Sheets, Beds, Cleaners

N. 2nd st. Phone 359

Federal Farm Loans

Make application with the Adams County National Farm Loan Ass'n., Charter No. 5152, office with the Schurmer Abstract Co., 133 South 2nd street, Decatur. Fire and windstorm insurance accepted in any old line or good mutual insurance co.

For Better Health See

Dr. H. Frohnappfel Licensed

Chiropractor and Naturopath

Phone 314 104 So. 3rd st. Neurocalometer Service X-Ray Laboratory

Office hours: 10 to 12 a. m. 1 to 5 p. m. 6 to 8 p. m.

MARKET REPORTS

DAILY REPORT OF LOCAL AND FOREIGN MARKETS

LOCAL MARKET
Decatur Berne Craigville Hoagland
Corrected August 3
No commission and no yardage.
Veals received Tuesday, Wednesday, Friday, Saturday.

160 to 200 lbs.	$4.70
200 to 250 lbs.	$4.80
250 to 300 lbs.	$4.90
300 to 350 lbs.	$4.75
140 to 160 lbs.	$3.65
120 to 140 lbs.	$2.90
100 to 120 lbs.	$2.40
Roughs	$3.00
Stags	$1.50
Vealers	$5.50
Dwe and wether lambs	$6.25

CHICAGO GRAIN CLOSE

	Sept.	Dec.	May
Wheat, old	1.02 1/2	1.04 1/2	1.07
new	1.02 1/2	1.04 1/2
Corn	71 1/2	74 1/2	75 1/2
Oats, old	46 1/2	47 1/2	49 1/2
new	46 1/2	47 1/2

East Buffalo Livestock

Hog receipts 2,100; holdovers 150; active, strong to mostly 5 to 10 higher; bulk desirable 160 to 180 lbs. averaging 190 lbs. up, $5.40 to $5.50; largely $5.45 to $5.50; 140 to 200 lbs. averaging 160 to 170 lbs. $5 to $5.25; pigs and underweights scarce, quoted $3.50 to $4.85.

Cattle receipts 300; market steady; common grass steers and heifers $4 to 10; cut and cutters $3.50 to $4.25.

Calf receipts 350; vealers generally 50c higher; bulk good to choice $6.50; common and medium $4.50 to $5.75.

Sheep receipts 1,000; lambs strong to 25c higher; good to near choice $7.75, equivalent to $8 for selections; common and medium $5.50 to $7.

FORT WAYNE LIVESTOCK

Fort Wayne, Ind., Aug. 3.—(U.P.)—Livestock:
Hogs, 10 to 15c higher; 250-300 lbs. $5.15; 200-250 lbs. $5; 150-200 lbs. $4.85; 160-180 lbs. $4.70; 150-160 lbs. $3.85; 140-150 lbs. $3.60; 130-140 lbs. $3.20; 120-130 lbs. $2.75; 100-120 lbs. $2.40; roughs, $2.75; stags, $2.

Calves, $6; lambs, $6.50.

LOCAL GRAIN MARKET

Corrected August 3
No. 1 New Wheat, 60 lbs. or better 92c
No. 2 New Wheat (58 lbs.) 91c
Oats, 30-lb. test 40c
White or mixed corn 85c
First class yellow corn 90c
Wool 20 to 25c

ASK PROBE OF CLOSED FIRM

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE ONE)
ficials went there for an investigation they found the rooms empty, Markum said.

T. M. Overly, manager of the Better Business Bureau of Indianapolis, disclosed today that the firm had been under investigation for several months and that warnings against its business practices had been issued in a bulletin published by the bureau.

He described the firm's operation as a "sell and switch" scheme.

"Customers were solicited over the phone," he explained. "Stock was purchased for them and the customers were kept so far in debt that they were forced to sell their stock and switch to another."

The safe in the Mann and Co. office here was broken open in the presence of Overly and an employee of the state securities commission but no securities or stock purchase books were found.

William P. O'Neill, state securities commissioner, said he had demanded a financial statement from the company shortly before Ullman died but that none was received.

A Rich Milk Food.

Cloverleaf

ICE CREAM

Approved by Good Housekeeping

N. A. BIXLER

OPTOMETRIST

Eyes Examined, Glasses Fitted

HOURS:

8:30 to 11:30 12:30 to 5:00

Saturdays, 8:00 p. m.

Telephone 135.

THURSDAY, FRIDAY, SATURDAY

A Guaranteed Permanent

$1 Ringlet End Curls

Shampoo and Set Included

Croquignole, Spiral, Combination.

COZY BEAUTY SHOP

Room 5 K.C. Bldg. Phone 266

PROJECT HEAD PADDED PAYROLL

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE ONE)

Holtman is a former secretary to James I. Farley, Auburn, fourth district congressman. After his dismissal several months ago he was given employment in the Al-

DEATH SONG

by JOAN CLAYTON AND MALCOLM LOGAN

CHAPTER XXXIII

It was only as we puffed out of the station, with the first obstacle surmounted, that I began to consider what I would do in New York. Assuming that the woman who had come to visit Vail was his wife, and went to his sister's apartment, how would I persuade her to return to Sherwood Forest with me? My trip suddenly began to appear like the most futile sort of wild goose chase. When I was with Mark, I could catch his enthusiasm and optimism, but now a feeling of helplessness and depression settled upon me.

At that moment, the conductor arrived, and when I had bought my ticket, I realized that I had had no breakfast. I went into the diner, resolving to think no more about my errand until I had eaten. Bacon and eggs, toast and black coffee were wonderful restoratives. When I returned to the coach, I felt much more confident. I still did not know just what I would do, but I felt that I could handle the situation when it arose.

Two hours after I had boarded it, the train pulled into the dismal station at Weehawken. I took the ferry to Forty-second street and taxied to the address Mark had given me. It was a large, impressive apartment house, guarded by a tall Irish doorman. I took the elevator to the third floor and found Miss Vail's apartment in the rear. A negro maid answered the bell.

"Is Miss Vail in?" I asked.

"No sir, Miss Vail's out," she said.

I paused to consider for a moment and she began to close the door.

"Do you expect her back today?" I asked.

"No, sir, she's out of town. You want to leave a message?"

"Tell her Mr. Fowler called," I said.

I stood for a minute in the hall as the door closed. I was disgusted with myself. I had planned to state the situation frankly to Vail's sister, but I had failed entirely to take into account the fact that she might be out. The woman might have been there and left, for all I knew.

There seemed to be nothing to do but wait. I walked down the hall to the stairway and opened the door leading to it. Leaving it open slightly, I sat down on the top step.

I had plenty of time for unpleasant reflections. My first reversal had shaken my confidence. I realized now that, if the woman did go to see Anne Vail, it would take a great deal of persuasion to make her go back to the sanatorium. I saw that I should have confided in Finn. The sheriff had the authority to force her to return. I had none.

I went through a bad half an hour before I heard the elevator stop and the crack in the doorway. I saw a woman pass me. My heart began to thump. The light was not very good, but even so I could see that her hair was a very light blond and that she wore a coat trimmed with some sort of black hair. She went down the hall and I heard her ring a bell. From my position I could not see her without putting my head out the doorway, but I heard her say, "I want to see Miss Vail."

The maid's voice answered, "She ain't in."

"When do you expect her back?" the woman asked.

"Tomorrow, maybe."

I heard the door close and the woman came down the hall. When she had passed me, I stepped quietly out from behind the door and followed her. My first glance convinced me that she was the woman whom the taxicab driver had taken to the sanatorium the day Vail was murdered.

Her hair was a paltry spurious platinum blond, set in hard, metallic waves. She wore a small black hat and a black coat trimmed with long, black silky hair. When she turned to ring for the elevator I saw her face—plump, highly rouged, with deep lines of selfishness and discontent running to the corners of her small mouth.

She was short, and her neck and hips were fat. I looked at her with a shock of disappointment. It seemed impossible that she could be the pretty woman whose photographs Vail had kept hidden in his room.

The woman turned and gave me a quick, appraising glance as I approached. Her blue eyes were predatory and wary; they observed, but ten county relief offices. He was placed in charge of a tax survey project in Fort Wayne.

Refuses Comment
Fort Wayne, Ind., Aug. 3.—(U.P.)—Otto W. Koenig, Allen county prosecutor, today refused to make any statement regarding alleged irregularities in the handling of MERA project accounts here by A. J. Holtman, Fort Wayne supervisor.

DEATH SONG

by JOAN CLAYTON AND MALCOLM LOGAN

CHAPTER XXXIII

It was only as we puffed out of the station, with the first obstacle surmounted, that I began to consider what I would do in New York. Assuming that the woman who had come to visit Vail was his wife, and went to his sister's apartment, how would I persuade her to return to Sherwood Forest with me? My trip suddenly began to appear like the most futile sort of wild goose chase. When I was with Mark, I could catch his enthusiasm and optimism, but now a feeling of helplessness and depression settled upon me.

At that moment, the conductor arrived, and when I had bought my ticket, I realized that I had had no breakfast. I went into the diner, resolving to think no more about my errand until I had eaten. Bacon and eggs, toast and black coffee were wonderful restoratives. When I returned to the coach, I felt much more confident. I still did not know just what I would do, but I felt that I could handle the situation when it arose.

Two hours after I had boarded it, the train pulled into the dismal station at Weehawken. I took the ferry to Forty-second street and taxied to the address Mark had given me. It was a large, impressive apartment house, guarded by a tall Irish doorman. I took the elevator to the third floor and found Miss Vail's apartment in the rear. A negro maid answered the bell.

"Is Miss Vail in?" I asked.

"No sir, Miss Vail's out," she said.

I paused to consider for a moment and she began to close the door.

"Do you expect her back today?" I asked.

"No, sir, she's out of town. You want to leave a message?"

"Tell her Mr. Fowler called," I said.

I stood for a minute in the hall as the door closed. I was disgusted with myself. I had planned to state the situation frankly to Vail's sister, but I had failed entirely to take into account the fact that she might be out. The woman might have been there and left, for all I knew.

There seemed to be nothing to do but wait. I walked down the hall to the stairway and opened the door leading to it. Leaving it open slightly, I sat down on the top step.

I had plenty of time for unpleasant reflections. My first reversal had shaken my confidence. I realized now that, if the woman did go to see Anne Vail, it would take a great deal of persuasion to make her go back to the sanatorium. I saw that I should have confided in Finn. The sheriff had the authority to force her to return. I had none.

I went through a bad half an hour before I heard the elevator stop and the crack in the doorway. I saw a woman pass me. My heart began to thump. The light was not very good, but even so I could see that her hair was a very light blond and that she wore a coat trimmed with some sort of black hair. She went down the hall and I heard her ring a bell. From my position I could not see her without putting my head out the doorway, but I heard her say, "I want to see Miss Vail."

The maid's voice answered, "She ain't in."

"When do you expect her back?" the woman asked.

"Tomorrow, maybe."

I heard the door close and the woman came down the hall. When she had passed me, I stepped quietly out from behind the door and followed her. My first glance convinced me that she was the woman whom the taxicab driver had taken to the sanatorium the day Vail was murdered.

Her hair was a paltry spurious platinum blond, set in hard, metallic waves. She wore a small black hat and a black coat trimmed with long, black silky hair. When she turned to ring for the elevator I saw her face—plump, highly rouged, with deep lines of selfishness and discontent running to the corners of her small mouth.

She was short, and her neck and hips were fat. I looked at her with a shock of disappointment. It seemed impossible that she could be the pretty woman whose photographs Vail had kept hidden in his room.

The woman turned and gave me a quick, appraising glance as I approached. Her blue eyes were predatory and wary; they observed, but Evidence, obtained by field examiners at the request of William H. Book, Indianapolis, director of Indiana relief, was placed in the hands of Allen county officials this morning.

"I can make no statement as to whether a case will be brought against Holtman," Koenig said. "until I have had a chance to go over the reported facts."

DEATH SONG

by JOAN CLAYTON AND MALCOLM LOGAN

CHAPTER XXXIII

It was only as we puffed out of the station, with the first obstacle surmounted, that I began to consider what I would do in New York. Assuming that the woman who had come to visit Vail was his wife, and went to his sister's apartment, how would I persuade her to return to Sherwood Forest with me? My trip suddenly began to appear like the most futile sort of wild goose chase. When I was with Mark, I could catch his enthusiasm and optimism, but now a feeling of helplessness and depression settled upon me.

At that moment, the conductor arrived, and when I had bought my ticket, I realized that I had had no breakfast. I went into the diner, resolving to think no more about my errand until I had eaten. Bacon and eggs, toast and black coffee were wonderful restoratives. When I returned to the coach, I felt much more confident. I still did not know just what I would do, but I felt that I could handle the situation when it arose.

Two hours after I had boarded it, the train pulled into the dismal station at Weehawken. I took the ferry to Forty-second street and taxied to the address Mark had given me. It was a large, impressive apartment house, guarded by a tall Irish doorman. I took the elevator to the third floor and found Miss Vail's apartment in the rear. A negro maid answered the bell.

"Is Miss Vail in?" I asked.

"No sir, Miss Vail's out," she said.

I paused to consider for a moment and she began to close the door.

"Do you expect her back today?" I asked.

"No, sir, she's out of town. You want to leave a message?"

"Tell her Mr. Fowler called," I said.

I stood for a minute in the hall as the door closed. I was disgusted with myself. I had planned to state the situation frankly to Vail's sister, but I had failed entirely to take into account the fact that she might be out. The woman might have been there and left, for all I knew.

There seemed to be nothing to do but wait. I walked down the hall to the stairway and opened the door leading to it. Leaving it open slightly, I sat down on the top step.

I had plenty of time for unpleasant reflections. My first reversal had shaken my confidence. I realized now that, if the woman did go to see Anne Vail, it would take a great deal of persuasion to make her go back to the sanatorium. I saw that I should have confided in Finn. The sheriff had the authority to force her to return. I had none.

I went through a bad half an hour before I heard the elevator stop and the crack in the doorway. I saw a woman pass me. My heart began to thump. The light was not very good, but even so I could see that her hair was a very light blond and that she wore a coat trimmed with some sort of black hair. She went down the hall and I heard her ring a bell. From my position I could not see her without putting my head out the doorway, but I heard her say, "I want to see Miss Vail."

The maid's voice answered, "She ain't in."

"When do you expect her back?" the woman asked.

"Tomorrow, maybe."

I heard the door close and the woman came down the hall. When she had passed me, I stepped quietly out from behind the door and followed her. My first glance convinced me that she was the woman whom the taxicab driver had taken to the sanatorium the day Vail was murdered.

Her hair was a paltry spurious platinum blond, set in hard, metallic waves. She wore a small black hat and a black coat trimmed with long, black silky hair. When she turned to ring for the elevator I saw her face—plump, highly rouged, with deep lines of selfishness and discontent running to the corners of her small mouth.

She was short, and her neck and hips were fat. I looked at her with a shock of disappointment. It seemed impossible that she could be the pretty woman whose photographs Vail had kept hidden in his room.

The woman turned and gave me a quick, appraising glance as I approached. Her blue eyes were predatory and wary; they observed, but

COMMISSIONERS CLAIM TO BE ALLOWED AUGUST 6, 1934

Fort Wayne, Ind., Aug. 3.—(U.P.)—Commissioners of the Indiana State Prison, today claimed to be allowed August 6, 1934, to visit the prison at Joliet, Ill., to see the man who was convicted of the murder of Vail.

DEATH SONG

by JOAN CLAYTON AND MALCOLM LOGAN

CHAPTER XXXIII

It was only as we puffed out of the station, with the first obstacle surmounted, that I began to consider what I would do in New York. Assuming that the woman who had come to visit Vail was his wife, and went to his sister's apartment, how would I persuade her to return to Sherwood Forest with me? My trip suddenly began to appear like the most futile sort of wild goose chase. When I was with Mark, I could catch his enthusiasm and optimism, but now a feeling of helplessness and depression settled upon me.

At that moment, the conductor arrived, and when I had bought my ticket, I realized that I had had no breakfast. I went into the diner, resolving to think no more about my errand until I had eaten. Bacon and eggs, toast and black coffee were wonderful restoratives. When I returned to the coach, I felt much more confident. I still did not know just what I would do, but I felt that I could handle the situation when it arose.

Two hours after I had boarded it, the train pulled into the dismal station at Weehawken. I took the ferry to Forty-second street and taxied to the address Mark had given me. It was a large, impressive apartment house, guarded by a tall Irish doorman. I took the elevator to the third floor and found Miss Vail's apartment in the rear. A negro maid answered the bell.

"Is Miss Vail in?" I asked.

"No sir, Miss Vail's out," she said.

I paused to consider for a moment and she began to close the door.

"Do you expect her back today?" I asked.

"No, sir, she's out of town. You want to leave a message?"

"Tell her Mr. Fowler called," I said.

I stood for a minute in the hall as the door closed. I was disgusted with myself. I had planned to state the situation frankly to Vail's sister, but I had failed entirely to take into account the fact that she might be out. The woman might have been there and left, for all I knew.

There seemed to be nothing to do but wait. I walked down the hall to the stairway and opened the door leading to it. Leaving it open slightly, I sat down on the top step.

I had plenty of time for unpleasant reflections. My first reversal had shaken my confidence. I realized now that, if the woman did go to see Anne Vail, it would take a great deal of persuasion to make her go back to the sanatorium. I saw that I should have confided in Finn. The sheriff had the authority to force her to return. I had none.

I went through a bad half an hour before I heard the elevator stop and the crack in the doorway. I saw a woman pass me. My heart began to thump. The light was not very good, but even so I could see that her hair was a very light blond and that she wore a coat trimmed with some sort of black hair. She went down the hall and I heard her ring a bell. From my position I could not see her without putting my head out the doorway, but I heard her say, "I want to see Miss Vail."

The maid's voice answered, "She ain't in."

"When do you expect her back?" the woman asked.

"Tomorrow, maybe."

I heard the door close and the woman came down the hall. When she had passed me, I stepped quietly out from behind the door and followed her. My first glance convinced me that she was the woman whom the taxicab driver had taken