WHAT FAMILIAR NAMES MEAN

GILBERT. The family name "Talbot" (also spelled "Talbot", "Talbut", and "Talbutt") was originally a Norman French personal name. Its source is probably the Old French "talbot" meaning "pillager", "bandit", and "thief."

In the dialect of Normandy "talbot" means "lamp-black" and "pot-black." It is possible that the word took on the extended meaning of "thief" because of the habit of some French thieves of blackening their faces in order that they might not be recognized. It will be recalled that in early days certain personal names became associated with certain animals. Thus "talbot" was frequently given as a name to dogs, just as "Gib" "Gilbert" became the recognized name for a cat, and "Cuddy" (Cuthbert) was regularly applied to donkeys.

In spite of the probable origin of their name, the Talbots have been an illustrious family. They are definitely known to have gone over to England with William the Conqueror and to have held many important positions. A certain Richard Talbot accompanied Henry the Second to Ireland, and was granted valuable lands by that monarch. Other Talbots have filled the highest offices of church and state in Ireland.

foremost bankers, his minister of economics for a six months period. It was significant that he did this on the day of Hindenburg's death, that Hindenburg's last official act, last Sunday, was to name Schacht to his new post.

It was significant also that Schacht is a hard-boiled, old-school financier. For him no new deals, but economy and last ditch support of currency. Schacht's appointment seemed to proclaim Germany's economic policy.

Pay Tribute

(Copyright, 1934, by U.P.)

Neudeck, East Prussia, Aug. 3. —(U.P.)—Field guns on army parade grounds and batteries on warships at sea roared martial tribute today to President Paul Von Hindenburg, Germany's greatest soldier, as he lay in state at his Neudeck chateau.

The clanging of church bells called the faithful to prayer for the soul of the old field marshal. Every flag in the country was at half mast. Millions wore mourning bands. Music was still.

As the guns roared their 21-gun salute at the set hour of 8 a. m., Hindenburg lay on a bed at his chateau, his face reflecting absolute peace.

Two army and two navy officers stood at the corners of his bed with drawn swords. There was a Reichswehr guard of honor outside, drawn from the Third battalion of the First Infantry regiment. The personal guard of honor inside was from the third Infantry.

Hindenburg was clad in his night shirt.

There was a tremendous influx of visitors. The crown prince was here.

Last night workers of his estate and their families, numbering 190, edged shyly into the room to pay their respects.

In Berlin so many persons wanted to honor the dead hero last night that many were turned away from services, though all churches held them.

There was a gigantic ceremony in the Lustgarten, in the square where in 1914, the kaiser announced the outbreak of war.

STATE POLICE ADD EQUIPMENT

Equipment For Detection Of Criminals Is Being Installed

Indianapolis, Aug. 3.—(U.P.)—Installation of bertillon, finger printing and other laboratory equipment in state police headquarters was announced today by Al G. Feeney, state safety director.

The bureau formerly kept records, pictures and other information on criminals but the new equipment greatly increases effectiveness of the bureau, Feeney said.

A large room adjoining police headquarters was remodeled into modern bertillon headquarters with special cameras being installed for photographing criminals.

Under plan instituted several months ago all state patrolmen have been taught how to take finger prints. Kits are carried by the patrolmen at all times.

The cards are sent to headquarters and filed along with other information on the history of a criminal's case from the time of his arrest until his conviction or exoneration.

"The new system will give us finger-tip information on any person who has a criminal record," Feeney said. "Installation of the bertillon equipment will speed up our work and save our department money. Until now all our bertillon work has been done by private photographers."
