Gov. Albert G. Schmedeman. Administration friends assumed the president's speech would touch principally on projected ramifications of the new deal's social and economic aspects.

The address was one of the highlights of Wisconsin's tercentary celebration.

The president entered Wisconsin soon after departing from Winona, Minn., early last night where, despite the intense heat, a crowd estimated at 20,000 milled about his train on the siding. Earlier, he completed an inspection of Mississippi river development projects and a visit to the famed Mayo Brothers, surgeons and physicians of Rochester, Minn. At Rochester the heat failed to prevent a turnout of 50,000 persons. Many were overcome by the sun which broiled over the crowd.

Domestic silver mined since Dec. 21, 1933, Morgenthau said, may still be delivered to mints under the proclamation of that date.

Disclosure of the intention to nationalize silver came after Morgenthau had issued an order requiring American consular invoices on all silver shipments to the United States exceeding $100 except for silver already in transit, silver for re-export and crude silver.

Morgenthau told reporters that silver already enroute to the United States prior to the proclamation would be considered free silver.
