Early River Navigation The first trip by the Ohio river by steamer was made in May, 1815, by the Enterprise, of 75 tons. She traveled from New Orleans to Louisville in that year, the trip taking 23 days. The steamer Washington made the same trip in 1916 and inaugurated steamboat navigation in the Mississippi valley.

Amethyst One Believes Charm Worn as an amulet or charm, an amethyst for centuries was held to ward off the evil of witchcraft. "If the name of the sun or moon were engraved on it," says a recent writer, "and the stone hung about the neck from the hair of a baboon or the feather of a swallow, the wearer would be safe from half magic as well as magic." —The Sun

Rabbit Fur Widely Used

Use of rabbit skins in the fur trade is increasing rapidly, due to the disappearance of many of the finer pelts for animals. More rabbit fur is now used than any other kind in the making of fur garments, trimmings, glove linings and felt for hats.

WINE MAKING AT HOME

Amateur wine-making is not difficult. A cheap, exhilarating, wholesome and palatable beverage may be obtained by following a few simple instructions outlined in our Washington Bureau's newest bulletin, "HOME MADE WINES. Under internal revenue laws it is lawful to make annually two hundred gallons of unfortified wine for the use of one's own family without payment of tax, provided none of it is sold or otherwise removed from the home where manufactured.

CAROLINE by RUTH DEWEY GROVES

The Philip Rutledges and Henry Dunstons have been enemies for years, but love sometimes laughs at feuds, so Howard Dunston becomes engaged to lovely Caroline Rutledge despite their parents' opposition. Then Henry ruins Philip in business. This changes everything. "If I marry, my father will cut me off, and, if I know you, it wouldn't please you any more to be poor than it would me," Caroline says. Disappointed that money should mean so much to Howard, Caroline breaks their engagement. Another crushing blow falls when Philip tells Caroline and her mother, Alva—a pampered, selfish woman—that they must vacate "Hawthorn", their lovely home, and live in a poorer section of town. Caroline had never attributed strength to her mother, but she expected her to carry through gracefully instead of giving away to her emotion as she had. Caroline is doubly disappointed when her father, whom she thought capable of meeting any emergency, accepts defeat. Returning from a ride, Caroline learns that Howard telephoned, but she refuses to call him, saying, "Howard will have to come back to me unasked." Their financial status has given Mrs. Rutledge a change of heart where Howard is concerned. "Beggars cannot be choosers," she reminds Caroline. Howard takes a trip to California. The Rutledges leave "Hawthorn" and go to their future home, an unpretentious dwelling on the south side of town. Alva collapses from shock and fatigue. Their neighbors, Mrs. Stuart and her son, Malcolm, come to the Rutledges' assistance. Mrs. Stuart does not know who they are, but one look at Alva's expensive clothes convinces her that these people had seen better days.

Downstairs she tried to thank her, but the words were halted by suppressed tears. Mrs. Stuart said, with huskiness in her own voice: "Come along and I'll show you how to put the quarter in the meter." They found Mr. Rutledge searching among some unpacked cases on the kitchen floor. Caroline said: "Father, this is a next door neighbor who has been so kind and helpful. Mrs. Stuart will forgive me for not presenting my father, Mr. Rutledge, earlier?" "Mr. Rutledge?" Mrs. Stuart repeated in surprise rather than in acknowledgement of the introduction. Philip bowed. "I must add my gratitude to my daughter's," he said. "We appreciate your kindness very much, Mrs. Stuart."

"Why—why," she stammered, "it's nothin' more than I'd do for like leaving the house, Miss Rutledge"—she almost blushed at the thought of how she'd invited them to supper with Malcolm on a night when there was only corned beef hash, hot biscuits and apple pie to eat—"I'll help you a bit here and then I'll send Malcolm over with some dessert for you."

"Please don't trouble," Caroline said. "We stopped at a rotisserie in town and got a roast chicken. I'm afraid it got dropped," Malcolm told her. "I found it beside the car. It's all wet." Their eyes met, and they laughed. Caroline was thinking she was glad the last straw was a funny one—or was it? Malcolm laughed because he felt so infernally sorry for her. "I can go for another one for you, but I can't get it in South Town," he added quickly.

Mr. Rutledge had begun to feel

Caroline placed Howard's photograph on her dressing table and sat down to let her hungry gaze feast upon it.

Caroline looked about the cluttered room. "I wish I might offer you tea, Mrs. Stuart," she began but was interrupted by a knock on the back door.

"That's Malcolm," Mrs. Stuart said, and opened the door. "Thanks, Ma," Malcolm said, and put down a load of suitcases and bags. "I brought these in because it's stopped raining now, Miss Rutledge," he said to Caroline. "The car's in the garage. Have you got a lock for it?"

"Why no... have we, Father?" "I'm sure I don't know," Mr. Rutledge admitted.

"This is my son, Malcolm, Mr. Rutledge," Mrs. Stuart said proudly. "He works in your factory. He's an inspector."

"Oh, indeed? That's a very good position," Philip said coldly. "How do you do, young man?" Caroline caught a fleeting look of uncertainty in Malcolm's eyes. She wished her father had offered his hand.

"It was very kind of you to go for the doctor," she said warmly to Malcolm. "I'm sure we'd have been quite helpless without you and your mother."

Mrs. Stuart beamed. She was a widow and Malcolm was her only child. It always pleased her when anyone was pleased with him. "I think it's time we all had supper," she said brightly. "If you don't feel that the Stuart kindness was more than he cared to accept from 'these people,' as he termed mother and son, he spoke to Caroline.

"Really, my dear," he said stiffly. "We must not impose upon the good nature of our neighbors. Can't you manage something for us without troubling them further?"

Caroline sensed a subtle snobbishness behind his words. And he had no right, she felt suddenly, to refuse help when to do so meant shifting the entire burden of their comfort to her shoulders. Practically from the moment he had told them of their misfortune it had been, "Caroline, can't you manage this?" and "Caroline, don't you think you can see to that?" Her body, young and strong as it was, seemed nervous with hot wires. The effort required to prepare a meal of any kind in their disordered, childly kitchen, appeared to go beyond the last ounce of her strength.

She looked at her father with defiant resolution. Then she turned to Mrs. Stuart. "If you will stay here and do what you can to create a little cheer in the place I'll go with... Malcolm"—she said the name deliberately—"and bring back a hot dinner for all of us. And we'll stop for the dessert at your house. Please don't refuse."

Lightning Left Freak Trail Groton, Conn.—(U.P.)—Lightning left a freak trail through Ernest Blackington's home. Striking a tree, it dug a ditch to the porch, pushed a cart 15 feet, split the kitchen linoleum, smashed a door casing, followed a water pipe to the sink.

"BUSTER" DISPROVES OLD RED FOX THEORY TRAVERSE CITY, Mich. (U.P.)—An idea that all red foxes are killers and surly brutes has been disproved by "Buster," a pet fox in the local zoo.

"Buster," one of three fox puppies brought to the zoo when they were babies, have proved to the citizenry of this city that all foxes are not "varmints." However, his two family members lived up to their reputation, becoming surly and disagreeable, in a short time.

The Traverse City pet likes attention. Each evening he is allowed the run of the zoo grounds. He romps about playing with anything that will play. He always comes when called and behaves—literally—like a gentleman.
