NOTICE TO TAXPAYERS

Notice is hereby given that Monday, November 5, will be the last day to pay your Fall installment of taxes. The county treasurer's office will be open from 8 A. M. to 4 p. m. during the tax paying season. All taxes not paid by that time will become delinquent and a 5% penalty will be added. Also interest at the rate of 8% will be charged from the date of delinquency until paid. Those who have bought or sold property and wish a division of taxes are asked to come in at once. Call on the Auditor for errors and any reductions. The Treasurer will not be responsible for the penalty of delinquent taxes resulting from the omission of tax-payers to state definitely on what property they desire to pay, in whose name it may be found, in what township or corporation it is situated.

Persons owing delinquent taxes should pay them at once, the law is such that there is no option left for the Treasurer but enforce the collection of delinquent taxes.

The annual sale of delinquent lands and lots will take place on the second Monday in February 1935 at 10:00 A. M.

County orders will not be paid to anyone owing delinquent taxes. All persons are warned against them. No receipts or checks will be held after expiration of time, as the new depository law requires the Treasurer to make daily deposit.

Particular attention, if you pay taxes in more than one township mention the fact to the Treasurer, also see that your receipts call for all your real estate and personal property.

In making inquiries of the Treasurer regarding taxes to pay, reply to, not fail to include return postpaid.

JOHN WECHTER, Treasurer, Adams County, Indiana. Oct. 13 to Nov. 2

GIRL IN THE FAMILY

BY BEATRICE BURTON

SYNOPSIS

Susan Broderick, young and pretty member of a poor but aristocratic family, is engaged to Wallace Steffen, promising young banker. Susan is exceptionally fond of Wallace but is not sure that she loves him. Although she doesn't realize it, Susan is more attracted by Allen Sholes, the new roomer, whom her snobbish relatives ignore. Uncle Worthy, his wife Edna and Aunt Lottie, still consider themselves the cream of society and will not tolerate anyone they regard beneath them. That is why they discourage Susan and John's (her brother) friendship for Uncle Arthur Cullen and his family, their late mother's relatives. John, tired of his relatives' superior attitude, upbraids them for being snobbish. Christmas morning, Morris Broderick, Susan's father, stuns the family with the news that he is to marry Mrs. Hopper, a widow. John takes Allen to the Cullens' for dinner, leaving Susan to help entertain her aunts' and uncle's guests. That afternoon, Sara Cullen phones asking Susan to leave the old folks and join them. While dressing, Susan keeps thinking of Allen, hoping something will make him look at her the way men do her cousin, Mary. The party at Cullens' is a gay, informal affair. Susan, preparing a salad in the pantry, feels someone gazing at her and looks up to see Allen standing there. Finding them there, Mary asks: "Sister Broderick, is this any way for an engaged girl to act? Cornering a perfectly nice man whom I've picked to be my own particular partner for the evening?" Allen asks Susan if she is really engaged. As she looks up at him to answer, she realizes it is Allen and not Wallace she loves. Susan confides in her aunt, Nell Cullen, who advises her not to announce her engagement. Two days later, however, Susan is stunned to see her picture and the announcement in the paper. Aunt Edna had given it to the society reporter.

CHAPTER XVII

"It was announced yesterday really," said Lottie. "We told a few people, and later on your father came home from Mrs. Hopper's, and he and your Uncle Worthy let everybody know about it."

"They were drinking your health and Wallace's all over the house," chimed in Aunt Edna. "I think they had quite a bit too much Christmas cheer in the egg nog. Quite a bit."

"You just imagine it," said Uncle Worthy.

Aunt Edna sniffed. "Well, you put enough into it to make you dance around all afternoon after Jessie Bunt's, like a clown!" she said. "I noticed her giggling at you, too." In Aunt Edna's eyes Uncle Worthy was a great lover, irresistible to all women.

That afternoon a delivery truck from Hart's store stopped in the snowy street outside the house and the boy came running up to the door with a package for Susan.

Inside the cover of the pasted-on box that the green paper wrappings revealed lay Connie Sayre's visiting card with "Love from Connie" written across it, and under the layers of white tissue paper was a wicker silk breakfast coat of a dim and subtle pink.

"It's an engagement present," Lottie cried in rapture. "Oh, but won't it be just the thing to wear when you and Wallace have breakfast in your own hotel room on your honeymoon. . . it's perfect! I've been wishing I could get you one, but I just don't seem to have the money right now."

Susan lifted the coat from the box. "If I'd gone to business school and got a position somewhere as I ought to have done two or three years ago, I could buy my own thing now, Lottie."

"Oh, we'll get a trousseau together for you somehow or other," said Aunt Edna. "We have almost six months before June, and we're going to start cutting down our household expenses right away. Your uncle and I had a long talk about it yesterday. We've decided to let Anna go after all."

Susan's eyes flew open. "Let Anna go?"

Two weeks before Aunt Edna had said that under no circumstances would she discharge Anna. Susan remembered clearly how determined she had been in her declaration that there was no need for it. What could have happened since that time to make her change her mind?

"You see, your father has always contributed something toward the upkeep of this house, Susan," she began to explain, and holding the breakfast coat against her breast. Susan listened. "There has always been money from the rents and one thing and another, and according to your Grandfather Broderick's will, Lottie and Worthy and your father divided the income three ways—Well, yesterday your father asked Worthy to send him next month's check in Havana and he borrowed a hundred dollars from mountain resort, one winter she had had dancing lessons, and when she was thirteen she had gone to a certain Mademoiselle De Hamel every Saturday morning to talk French. She had learned to say grace in French and that was about the extent of her learning in that graceful language. Those vague accomplishments were all the education she had in addition to what she had received in her twelve years in the public schools.

She could not typewrite, and she knew nothing about even the simplest kind of office work. The only thing, in fact, that she did know and understand was housework—the kind of work that Anna did in the Brodericks' kitchen for eight dollars a week! A small bitter smile just barely twisted Susan's lips as she realized that she would probably be able to get a position as dish washer in a restaurant, or chambermaid in a hotel, without any difficulty.

"What do you mean?" asked Susan. "That he didn't leave any money behind to pay my board?"

"That's certainly no time for you to start talking 'job' again, Susan," said Aunt Edna, her corsets creaking as she leaned forward in her chair to poke the grate fire. "When Anna goes next week there's going to be more than enough work to keep us three women busy in this house. Why, just think of the washings, alone! If her stout body sagged in the chair as if all strength went out of it at the very thought of the washings, 'Besides, what kind of work could you do? You weren't brought up to earn your own living.' She said it with a flaring up of the Broderick family pride.

"Don't I know it!" cried Susan. "But if I only had been!—If I'd just had the business course that I've begged for and begged for, I'd probably have a good position by this time." Other things trembled on her lips. The things that she had said to them many times before when she had pleaded with them and her father to let her have the three hundred dollars that would have paid for a secretarial course at the Spencian Business College downtown.

It was no use to say them all again. It was too late to point out to them that office work was a much higher type of labor than peeling vegetables and scouring bath tubs and helping Anna with the ironing in the laundry in the basement.
