Donald H. Smith Addresses Ladies Shakespeare Club At Closing

The formal closing of the Ladies Shakespeare Club for the fifty-third year was held at the Rice Hotel, Friday night. The closing was in the form of a dinner and program.

Guests were invited to the dinner which was served in three delicious courses. The dining room of the hotel was prettily arranged for the occasion, and covers were marked with place cards in keeping with the club theme for the year, "The American Frontier". The place cards bore a design of a covered wagon with the word, frontier, in large red letters.

Mrs. C. A. Dugan, president of the club, acted as toastmistress and welcomed the members and guests. She stated that the local club rated third in the state of Indiana with continuous membership, and fourth in the United States. She introduced the speaker of the evening, Donald H. Smith of Van Wert, Ohio, who addressed the club members and guests on the subject of "Twin Devils."

He extended greetings from Van Wert to Decatur. He stated that the twin devils are fear and worry, and that even in the Biblical times this fear prevailed. He traced fear through the story of Moses, who led the army of Israelites through the Red Sea. Mr. Smith said that we fear the future and worry about the past. A child has fear, but no worry. We have mental worry and mental depression, Mr. Smith stated, and continued his address to prescribe a remedy.

He said that a warden of a hospital for the insane had once stated that for a person to live a long and happy life he must have a hobby, or two hobbies: a physical hobby and a mental hobby. He pointed out the value of inspirational music and closed with an interesting account of experiences in his travels.

that where a small operator has been in business, large buyers have established stockyards and eventually have driven the small buyer out of business. The necessity of showing convenience and necessity will determine such practices.

Norman Davis, who has been supervising director of the stockyards licensing division still retains a position in the new department and is aiding in the administration of the law. The old license fee for stockyards was $100 but a fee was required for inspection of weighing scales. The new fee is $125, but inspection of scales is included.

The department faces a dilemma in administration of the warehousing act which applies to all places where grain is to be received for storage for others and construes them as public country warehouses.

The license fee for each of these warehouses for a fiscal year is $10 and since there only will be approximately 100 to qualify under the act the entire revenue will be only approximately $1,000 annually, which likely will be insufficient to administer the act properly. The law sets up an appropriation of $1,000 from the general fund, but this must be repaid from the fees derived from the act.

This act was designed particularly to aid grain farmers to cooperate with the federal government in the grain-contract program and to provide licensed warehouse in close proximity to eliminate costly freight hauls.

Beside the fee of $10 the warehouseman shall execute a surety bond which shall not be less than $1,000 nor less than an amount equal to five cents per bushel of the capacity of the warehouse. The warehouseman shall receive all grains tendered for storage without discrimination if it is sound and in warehouseable condition and he shall deliver a warehouse receipt upon delivery. The warehouseman is entitled to charge one cent per bushel for receiving, insuring, storing and handling the grain for fifteen days or part thereof, and storage after the first fifteen days shall be one-thirtieth of a cent per bushel for the balance of the storage period. Then the warehouseman is entitled, upon tender of the receipt to charge five cents per bushel delivery charge in quantities of not less than a carload to any point designated, subject to the usual freight, inspection and switching charges.

The provisions of the act do not apply to any warehouse licensed under the U. S. warehouse act of 1916.

"Of the arrow and spear heads, many were found in Adams county, and some in Vigo county, near Terre Haute. The arrow head at the lower left hand corner of the arrow group is a dull looking piece of flint, but excellently shaped and of fine workmanship. It was found on a farm in St. Mary's township. head is one of greenish gray flint, a much more beautiful stone, and of fair shape and good workmanship, but with a chip out of one side near the tip. This head was found on a farm in Washington township.

"The drills were tools used drilling holes in various other stones and especially in bone and thorn needles and in stone ornaments. Two of these drills were found in Blue Creek township, and two near Terre Haute.

"The arrow and spear heads and drills from Vigo county could have been used by Indians of several different tribes with the most likely ones being the Plankeshaws, Shocksays or Delawares.

"Both scrapers displayed were found in Blue Creek township. One is of hard stone, ground to an edge, while the other is a slate-like stone.

"The black piece at the top center of this miscellaneous group is a stone ornament of slate and was probably the cherished possession of some Twightwee warrior or squaw. The holes in this piece were probably drilled with a flint drill.

"Most of the flint used in this part of the country came from the south central part of Ohio, and it is probable that these flint pieces came originally from that place, carried overland in the rough by some Indian arrow makers."
