LIBERALS WIN CANADIAN VOTE

Liberal Party Wins Most Decisive Victory In Nation's History

Ottawa, Ont., Oct. 15. —(UP)—Canada will be ruled the next five years by the liberal party. It won in the election of yesterday the largest parliamentary majority in Canada's history.

With all but 15 districts reported, the liberal party was assured of 174 seats, the conservative party of 40, the social-credit party 18, the socialist cooperative commonwealth federation 7, reconstruction party 1, and others 4.

The conservative party of Premier R. B. Bennett suffered a reverse unexpected by even its bitterest adversaries. In the present parliament it has 132 seats. Liberals interpreted the conservative defeat as a popular condemnation of "new deal" policies, modeled largely after those of President Roosevelt of the United States, which Bennett espoused.

William Lyon Mackenzie King, prime minister before the liberals lost power in 1930 after a nine-year reign, probably will again become head of the government.

Most effective aspect of the voting in returning the liberals to power was the failure of nine radical minority parties to make the showing expected of them. The social-credit party, which won control of Alberta recently with a promise of $25 monthly to every resident of the province, ran well in western provinces but other radical groups failed woefully. Only the Hon. H. H. Haven, leader of the new and touted reconstruction party, won a seat for his cause.

The liberal landslide was evidenced in the first precincts reporting in the eastern coast provinces. In Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, and Prince Edward Island liberals won 25 seats and conservatives 1.

Liberals won 57 seats in Quebec, 55 in Ontario, 13 in Manitoba, five in Saskatchewan, one in Alberta, and six in British Columbia. Conservatives won one seat in New Brunswick, five in Quebec, 25 in Ontario, five in British Columbia and one each in Manitoba, Saskatchewan, and Alberta.

Ten cabinet ministers of the Bennett administration lost their seats.

REPORT ETHIOPIANS

The Italian Somali front, Colonel Atou Ambay, attached to Nassibu's staff, arrived in Harar from the Ogaden front with a hundred-pound gas bomb, which he exhibited at the government palace. The gas bomb was photographed by newspaper cameramen.

The first victim of the dum-dum bullets allegedly used by the Italians was Youssouf Ahmed, of the fierce Mohammedan Rar Gurehahis tribe.

Takes Third Step

Geneva, Oct. 15. —(UP)—The league proceeded today with the third step of its program to penalize Italy, entailing a boycott of the latter's exports and imports, but found the United States a stumbling block in the path of making it complete.

Robert Coulondre of France told the economic sub committee it would be inadvisable at present to try to shut off oil coal, and copper from Italy, because the United States is the principal producer of them and they are not on President Roosevelt's list as war materials.

The committee pondered the problem but reached no decision leaving the question open in the hope that some means of surmounting the difficulty might be found.

Asks Withdrawal

(Copyright 1935 by United Press)
Paris, Oct. 15. —(UP)—Premier Pierre Laval has asked Great Britain to withdraw its home fleet ships from the Mediterranean as a gesture to enable him to seek a peaceable settlement of the Italian-Ethiopian crisis, an official source said today.

The disclosure was a sequel to a series of conferences by which Laval was understood to have embarked upon a new attempt to bring the Italian war on Ethiopia to a peaceful end.

No gesture to Italy could be so attractive, perhaps, as withdrawal of the great fighting ships sent from home waters in the British Isles to guard the entrances to the Mediterranean from Gibraltar and the Suez Canal.

"WIFE IN CUSTODY" by BEATRICE LUBITZ

SYNOPSIS

Helen Schiller, pretty manicurist in the Forty-fourth Street branch of the swanky Anastasia Beauty Salons, so far forgot discipline one morning as to dance a few steps before the work-day began—and was seen by Walter Riley, owner of the salons. He did not speak then about this, but returning that evening to the shop, went to her—and found himself disarmed by her smile, and attracted to her. He asked if he might take her to dance, and she assented. That led to other evenings together—evenings spent with him ever afraid that his sisters, who managed the Anastasia Salons for him, might see him.

After one evening at the theatre, Helen fell asleep as he drove her to her home in Bay Ridge—and he awakened her with a light kiss. She pushed him away, but he would not be denied, and he kissed her again. "You are the first girl I have ever kissed," he told her soberly, realizing that he loved her. Events in the Riley family followed fast, with Irene, who managed the swanky Fifty-seventh Street Salon, becoming engaged to the socially prominent Dirk Terhune. Walter sent a telegram to Helen asking her to meet him that night. She was thrilled by the ending—"Love." The day of Irene's marriage found the Riley home in an uproar with Mrs. Anastasia Riley wearing diamonds against the wishes of Irene. Squabbles held the center of the stage.

CHAPTER X

Irene exploded again when she saw Agnes. This time there was a real scene. Agnes had late gone girlish and the effect even Anastasia, who usually on general principles opposed Irene, had to admit was pretty awful. In her effort to look young because Carl was so youthful, Agnes, with the Riley thoroughness, had carried measures to extremes. She wore an Empire-cut light blue velvet dress and had arranged her hair in curls on top of her head.

She came into the bedroom a little hesitantly and Irene was being ministered to by the maid, nearly collapsed when she saw her. Stella, who had on her long squirrel wrap and was carefully pulling on long pearl-gray kid gloves, dissolved into weak laughter.

"My Lord, Agnes," she choked, "where in the name of heaven did you get that rig? No wonder you hid in your room with it."

Agnes burst into tears. Irene stormed. Anastasia commanded shortly: "Take off that truck. Irene, lend her your black net dress. Hurry up, young lady, we ain't got much time. Mary, comb out my daughter's hair and shake your stumps. Stella, run into Agnes's room and find her a slip and black slippers."

They all fell to re-dressing Agnes who was like putty in the hands of the others.

"Now don't sweat up the armpits of this dress, you fool," Irene snapped.

She had her hat on now and was pawing the ground with impatience. Finally they were ready to go. Anastasia, Irene and Walter and Agnes and Carl, looking frightened and uncomfortable in correct morning wedding attire, went in the limousine with their hired chauffeur while Stella and Jerry, Ethel and Eddie went in a hired car with another liveried chauffeur. There was a short quarrel in the foyer as to who was to go in which car. But when they arrived at the Terhune apartment they really presented an imposing group. With the exception of Agnes, who was only passable, the other three were noticeably attractive women. Anastasia herself was magnificent with her high square shoulders and firmly planted head. In her youth Anastasia had been able to carry a pail of water on her head while running without spilling a drop.

Irene was carried off by old Mrs. Terhune, a silvery old lady with a quavering voice and lovely old eyes in a face like cracked porcelain.

"My dear," she said to Irene as she took her wrap, "it is so lovely and dear of you to come here to us for the ceremony. We appreciate it so much. I hope you'll be happy. Oh! I know you and Dirk will be so happy. He's in the next room with father waiting for you. Dirk, come in, dear, I have brought you your bride."

Dirk came in swiftly from his father's room. He came directly to Irene's side. "Dear," he whispered. He took both her hands; then drew his mother to him with his free hand.

"I never knew it was possible to be so happy," he laughed joyously. Irene put her cheek against his. She was nearly as tall as he. She looked at his fine sensitive face, his full wide mouth, deep blue eyes like his mother's, behind the tortoiseshell glasses he habitually wore. She liked his glasses, they suited him and gave his face a homelier, less ascetic look.

"I love you, Dirk," Irene looked deeply into his eyes. "I do want to make you so happy."

He kissed her. "Darling!" He kissed her mother and Irene leaned over and kissed her too.

"Oh Dirk, thank you for the lovely flowers. It was so sweet of you to send each of us a corsage. Mother was so pleased."

Mr. Terhune came in. He was a twin to his wife, silvery, fragile, his blue-veined hands extended. "Greetings, my daughter," he said simply. "Thank you . . . father."

He kissed her tenderly, then his wife and then his son. There was something so genuinely beautiful in his greeting that Irene felt the tears rise to her eyes. Dirk's eyes behind his glasses were moist.

The big wood-paneled living room was now comfortably filled with people. As Irene entered her eye involuntarily sought her mother and sisters. They made an attractive group by the window. Anastasia leaning on her son's arm. A rave of love suffused Irene. How handsome they were. She gave them a brilliant smile.

They were proud of Irene, proud of themselves. Among the guests were some of New York's oldest families: the Updykes, the Ditmars, Colonel and Mrs. Ten Eyck, Mr. and Mrs. Harrison Chase, the Copleys-Blakes. The Rileys looked as good as the best!

Truly the Rileys had come a long way.

The simple ceremony over, there was served, in the dining room adjoining, a wedding breakfast (the Rileys secretly thought it extremely meager). Only Anastasia of the Rileys could appreciate the wine. She knew wines, for she had been for eight years before her marriage in the kitchen of the Hasselbrinks, the big Brooklyn beer king.

The young couple left shortly after.

ter to the gay accompaniment of handfuls of rice and good wishes. The guests slowly dispersed.

In the other car Anastasia and Agnes were indulging in a Riley complimentary orgy.

They agreed that Irene looked beautiful; that Dirk was the nicest member of his family and of all his friends and that the Rileys were actually the cream of the party.

"His sister is certainly some frump," Agnes supplied contentedly, nestling happily against her husband.

Anastasia snorted: "What she needs is some Anastasia beauty treatments."

"I like Dirk," Walter observed. "There's something so big and fine about him. I like him better than anyone I've ever met."

"Oh, you mustn't like him better than my Carl," Agnes bleated girlishly.

"Stop being kittenish," Anastasia admonished roughly. "I get sick when you do."

Agnes turned white but said nothing. Walter stepped hastily into the breach. "I'm going to be awfully busy these next few days. I guess we both will, eh, Carl, old boy?"

"We sure will, you bet," Carl responded fervently.

Arriving at the apartment, they all rushed in to change their clothes. "I'll run you up to your place in my car, Stella," Walter told her. "I left some papers there that I need."

"Oh that will be fine. Jerry, darling, you're going straight over to Brooklyn, aren't you, dear?"

"Yes, hon."

"Will you meet me for dinner or do you want me to come to Brooklyn?"

"Don't bother," he said hastily. "I'll meet you at the Brevoort at 7."

"You won't be late, lover?"

"I'll try not to be. You know sometimes I can't get away to the minute."

"You'll call me if you're delayed, won't you, lover?" Premise. "You know I get so nervous waiting."

"You must learn not to be nervous," he teased, pinching her cheek.

"But you'll surely be there, pet?"

"Certainly," he exploded impatiently, "and for lord's sake if I am late, don't get hysterical. I'll be there, I tell you."

"All right, dearest, and please try not to be late."

Jerry made his escape. Stella, re-dressed, now joined Walter.

"I'm ready, Walt."

"Righto."

They drove in silence to Forty-fourth Street. "Walter," Stella said finally, "you're the last of the Rileys still unmarried. If Irene could manage a Terhune, I guess you'll land one of the Vanderbilt girls."

"Don't kid yourself, Stell. What would a Vanderbilt girl want with me?"

"Why, Walter, you're the best looking man outside of the movies. That reminds me, Walt, you'll have to give Jerry a raise. He can't manage on what you're paying him. Look what Carl's getting, nearly twice as much. It isn't fair, Walt. I've done as much for the business as Agnes. Why should Carl get two hundred a week and Jerry only a hundred and a quarter?"

"Because Carl does twice as much work," Walter retorted bluntly.
