stated that severage disposal has been successfully handled only in the last three or four years. Decatur does not want to experiment with $135,000.

As for the unemployed, City Engineer Roop has plans on hand now, to keep them employed throughout the winter, without throwing Decatur in debt for the next 24 years.

I do not wish to start a controversy on the subject. I was elected by the people to transact their business to the best of my ability, and that is what I intend to do. I voted no, after studying the situation from all sides.

Councilman Andrew Appelman.

making money. I was tired of the business. It's a really a woman's business, not a man's. They were all set up. Mother had the kind of house she'd always craved; the girls had a nice home and I wanted to free myself of them.

"But the very home I bought for them to make them happy was like a rope around my neck. I couldn't get away. Mother screamed and cried and fainted and the girls made such a fuss. . . . God, it was awful. . . . My mother said the money she had lent me for the house would be lost. . . . I had robbed her of her hard-earned money. That was the worst of it, of course. It's better to be dead than to owe Anastasia money!" he added grimly.

"The first time I was called on the draft, I was underweight. Worry and aggravation nearly gave me t. b. Then mother hit upon the idea of buying a farm and for me to become a farmer since farmers were exempt. Walter's face was scarlet. I got a mortgage on the house and bought the farm in Bound Brook, New Jersey. I've got it rented now. Mother came out with me and I became a farmer. It was a nasty piece of slacking but I was in a trap. God, how I wish sometimes I had gone! I'd have been free. And the war would have been such a glorious adventure. . . . "Funny thing, I was never called in the draft again."

"But I worked like a dog on that farm, Helen. I produced twice as much as any farmer for miles around. I tried to do my bit that way."

"Dear Walter," she whispered. She laid her hand on his. "Luck was with me after that. I sold the house on Seventy-fourth Street to a real estate syndicate and made forty thousand dollars on it. Incredible, isn't it? They wanted the ground for an apartment site. With the money, I bought off my freedom from mama again and started the Fifty-seventh Street Anastasia."

"That's the true story of the rise of the Rileys, Helen, so help me. It shows me for what I am. A coward, a slacker and an opportunist!"

"Oh, Walter, you're so wrong about yourself! You are marvelous! What you have done is simply wonderful. It was wonderful of you to buy that house for your mother and your sisters so that they could have a home and your mother the kind of house she craved. I have never heard of such devotion, such splendid self-sacrifice. You are the most unselfish man I ever heard of. I never knew anybody could be so good."

"Sure, I only made forty thousand dollars profit on the house."

"But you didn't know you would when you bought it!"

"That's true enough."

"There, you see? You are wonderful."

VALLEYS HEATED BY STEAM EXIST BEYOND ROCKIES

WINNIPEG Man.—(UP)—Steam heated valleys are hidden among the mountains of the far north where the Rocky Mountains end in a plateau and the McKenzie range begins, according to Dr. Charles Cammell.

Dr. Cammell, minister for mines and natural resources for Canada, has been making a photographic survey of the unknown region to get data for a relief map.

The tropical valleys, existence of which was brought out through explorers' tales, have been investigated by him. He stated that they are almost inaccessible because of the steep mountain slopes and treacherous streams.

Vegetation in the explored valleys was rank and springs bubbled up hot and steaming. Several adventures have at times lived in the valleys and a tumble-down cabin in one of them denotes the ten-year stay of Tom Smith and his daughter, Jane.

Records left by these few visitors, however, are sketchy, and Dr. Cammell hopes to get the first reliable knowledge of this area through his survey.
