

Wage Battle for Baby's Custody

Anna Ware Limbaugh Mrs. Berroyer

Custody of an 11-month-old baby is the issue at stake in a sensational court battle in St. Louis between Anna Ware, left, 19-year-old unwed Pennsylvania mother, and Mrs. Nellie Tipton Meunch, recently acquitted of a kidnapping charge. Miss Ware asserts that Mrs. Meunch obtained custody of the baby and falsely claimed it as her own. Mrs. Helen Berroyer, upper right, friend of Mrs. Meunch, testified at the trial, presided over by Rush Limbaugh, that she had been standing in a hallway when a physician attended Mrs. Meunch, who was in great pain.

Freighter Sinks; Steamer Standing By To Effect Rescue

Manila, P. I., Nov. 11 — (UP) — Four passengers and the crew of the S. S. Silver Hazel escaped without injury when they abandoned the British freighter off the coast of Luzon today.

The first report on the fate of the occupants of the grounded freighter, which broke in two, came from Capt. W. R. Brust of the S. S. New York, rescue ship standing by for an attempt to remove the passengers from a barren rock at daylight.

In the radio message to the United Press, Captain Brust said: "Informed by Morse Lamp all crew and passengers o.k. Left ship and now on rock, part of ship sunk." Brust said high seas and a pounding surf twice had turned back his small boats in attempts to reach the rock and remove the approximately 100 persons stranded there.

WIFE IN CUSTODY

CHAPTER XXXII

Both Stella and Irene were bursting with scientific formulas for the care and raising of children. Agnes too threw herself wholeheartedly into the subject. She tried to get Irene to weave Christian Science into the process and, even though her suggestions were snubbed, she did not lose heart. Only Ethel refused to wallow in this "orgy of child-raising" as she called it.

"Oh, do have a baby, Ethel. It's the consummation of all that's fine and human in you," Stella urged one evening when they met at Anastasia's.

"Rats," Ethel said good-naturedly. "Neither Eddy nor I want a child. We're happy the way we are, thanks."

"You're making a mistake," Stella insisted. "Look at Irene, how she's wound Dirk around her finger by having the baby."

"You weren't so spectacularly successful," Agnes, who felt that Stella's remark belittled her hold on Carl, observed pointedly.

"Stella flushed. Ethel tried to cover the break. 'How is Helen's baby?'"

"My dear, she's simply dragging that kid up. She's not keeping weight charts or height records. Of course, Walter says the child's a picture. I don't go there, you know, since the way Helen behaved toward me, but Walter says she doesn't even have the child under the care of a specialist!"

"I'm not sure at Helen," Agnes interposed eagerly. "I'd go with you, Ethel."

"I will, too," decided Stella. "After all, we never actually had words, Helen and I, you know. Besides, it's my brother's house!"

And so Helen suddenly and without warning found her apartment once more a hub for their comings and goings.

Because of the strain on her health as the result of her operation, Stella had persuaded Walter that she could return to the Salon only on a part-time basis—at full-time pay, of course. Walter had grumbled a bit but he paid the bills just the same and Stella's salary went on.

And now a new storm was gathering. Agnes was beginning to nag at Walter. If Stella worked only part-time, why should she work all day? Besides, Agnes intended to have a nervous breakdown.

"What good is your Christian Science if you get breakdowns just the same?" Walter demanded angrily.

Agnes dissolved in tears and Walter had to repent his harshness. After a long, hysterical fuss, Agnes won out. She came in only part-time and for a long time both Stella and Agnes were careful to let Walter know that so expert was their management that even on a half-time basis they were able to keep up the morale of the Salons and even increase the receipts!

"Don't you think you ought to protect this living room step by a gate, Helen?" Irene asked.

They were having tea at Helen's new apartment in the same house on Madison Avenue, on the occasion of Irene's first official visit since the Stella affair.

"I don't think it's necessary, Irene. I want to teach her self-reliance. If she crawls too near, she'll fall and bump herself. Next time she'll be more careful."

"My dear, it's a commendably Spartan attitude but there can be a fractured skull, you know."

"She's avoided going near that step so far, Irene. I think she knows

Two of the passengers were Mr. and Mrs. George Bisinger of San Francisco.

The refugees from the Silver Hazel were huddled on a rock near San Bernardino Island off the coast of Luzon, main island of the Philippines group.

They reached there, apparently in the ship's boats, after the Silver Hazel were huddled on a rock near storm and began to split up. The after part of the freighter sank.

Floridians Try Rice Farming

Visit Patriot's Tomb

Cracow, Poland.—(U.P.)—The tomb of Kosciuszko, who served as George Washington's adjutant in the Revolutionary War, is now a vault of the Cathedral of Cracow.

"What specialist have you got Grace under?"

"None, Irene. I have her under no specialist nor do I intend to put her under one, unless, God forbid, she is ill. Dr. Johnson in Bound Brook gave me a diet for her and I use my own judgment. She is thriving beautifully. I don't want to make a hypocondriac of my baby."

There was a little silence. Agnes, who had preached this same doctrine on behalf of Christian Science, now squirmed to disagree with Helen but couldn't. Stella's eyebrows shot up. She tapped her carefully slipshod foot and murmured, "Well, everyone according to his lights. I must be toddling. Coming, Irene?"

"Yes, I want to be back in time to supervise Wells' bath."

A few nights later as Walter and Helen, arms entwined, hung over the crib listening to the deep rhythmic breathing of the sleeping child, Walter said suddenly:

"Don't you think you ought to take her to a baby doctor every other week or so to be sure she's all right?"

"You mean a specialist, don't you?"

"Yes, that's it, a baby specialist!"

"No, I don't, Walter. She's thriving beautifully. She's well and happy and she laughs all the time. Don't you think that's a fair test of health?"

Yes, but there may be things you're not doing."

"You mean I ought to keep charts and graphs?"

"Why, yes."

"Like Irene."

"It's the most modern way."

"So they've already told me, Walter. Now let me make myself clear. This is my baby and I'm going to raise it in the old-fashioned, common sense way. I was at Irene's feeding Wells a raw vegetable diet."

"The specialist recommended it. It's a diet rich in vitamins."

"Yes, and all the while I was there Wells howled. I think the baby's starved even though the curve of the chart or whatever nonsense it is, curves up. Do you ever hear Grace scream like that?"

"She is an exceptionally good baby, Helen."

"There's no such thing as an exceptionally good baby. She's an exceptionally well baby because I take good sensible care of her. No fads, no modern science to confuse me. Now, Walter, I don't want to be cross, but please don't bring me any more suggestions from the Salons on how to raise Grace!" Her voice trembled.

He rose. "I don't see why you're getting excited, dear. I was only suggesting."

"I think Irene's baby is pathetic, yet I wouldn't dream of venturing an opinion, much less a suggestion. She bit her lip."

The fire was burning brightly now. Walter carefully set up the fire-screen.

"I can't understand you lately. You're always so sweet until you start to talk about my sisters. Then you fly off the handle."

She laughed. "Darling, I'm sorry. She held out her hands and he sunk to the floor, his head on her knees."

"Walter, I suppose they'll always be here and I'll have to learn to tolerate them. You'll never know how beautifully I've succeeded because you're not around to hear when they say these things to me. But they shan't run my baby, do you hear? That I won't permit!"
