Young Student's Room

So reminiscent of early America is this room that one almost expects to look out of the window and see a Pilgrim in knee-breeches strolling by. The room would be suitable for a high-school student, and modernization funds may be used to create such a retreat. The money may be obtained from a private financial institution which is insured by the Federal Housing Administration.

Law Enforcement Officers To Meet

Ligonier, Ind., Dec. 9.—(U.P.)—Lieut. Ray G. Fisher, first district commander of the Indiana state police, announced today that a meeting of law enforcement officers of the district will be held at the state police barracks here Friday night.

Two speakers at the meeting will be Don L. Koonen, supervising lieutenant in charge at Ligonier, and Frank Morgan, state radio dispatcher from the state police radio station at Indianapolis.

Lieutenant Fisher said that all law enforcement officers from cities and towns in northeastern Indiana are expected to attend.

"HIGH SCHOOL TRAGEDY" by MAXINE CANTY

SYNOPSIS
Julie Martin, at 17, becomes an "inside" observer of the police investigation of the murder of her former French teacher, the pretty Constance ("Connie") Sinclair, who had been shot dead in her apartment by a party thus far unknown. Julie is on the "inside" because after school hours she is office assistant to Principal Perkins and the latter has detailed her as stenographer for Police Inspector O'Brien, who is busy examining suspects and others. Among those questioned, or wanted for questioning are Julie herself and her boy friend, Dicky Ward, who with her when she returned a pen to "Connie" a few hours before the tragedy; Mrs. Sardon, manager of the apartment house in which "Connie" was killed; Principal Perkins; Melvin Wright, the school's "problem boy"; Hym, a Filipino janitor, who had been discharged for insolence to "Connie" and who was missing since her death; Bruce Lloyd, her former fiancé, who refuses to say where he was on the murder night; and George Carrington, also reported to be a former suitor, who is now married. The latter seems to have a perfect alibi for the fatal night but he admits to the police that his wife has been missing since that evening. Julie's father has become counsel for Lloyd. The authorities are anxious to find Mrs. Carrington. Meanwhile Inspector O'Brien urges Julie to keep her eyes and ears open but her mouth shut tight. After a conference with Principal Perkins in the latter's office, the Inspector invites Julie to ride to her home with him. "I want to see your father," he says in the presence of the Principal.

"All right," I answered amiably, thinking that maybe I was giving myself away. "I'm going to knock your eyes out with a new blue dress."
"And won't that be something!" We discussed our crowd and whom we'd go with the rest of the way home. But when we got there, we were dragged back to the murder again, for there was a swell brown coupe in front of the house and Bruce Lloyd was standing on the porch.
"What's he doing here?" mumbled Dicky crossly.
"I don't know. Probably come to see Dad. Gee, isn't he good-looking!"
"I don't like that guy," growled Dicky. "I wouldn't be at all surprised if he bumped her off."
"Dicky!"
"Well, maybe he wouldn't have the nerve. He looks too perfect to be even a good murderer."

I climbed over the door of the car with what dignity I could in that performance, silently wishing he would see that it would open in the future. I smoothed down my green skirt, bloused my white sweater a little more, and patted my hair before taking out my books. Then I said very sweetly, "Well, I think he's gorgeous!"
I sauntered up the walk as Dicky rattled away. But I walked a little too slowly, for Mr. Lloyd left the porch and met me on the walk. He lifted his hat politely as he passed me, but of course I had never met him. Mother waited at the door for me and consoled me by saying that he was coming for dinner. I immediately rushed upstairs to decide what to wear. I really didn't have a decent thing in my whole closet. I thought I ought to look sweet and sympathetic and, instead, every darned dress I could find was what Dicky would call "snappy."

Mother called me downstairs to set the table for dinner. I had made up my mind. I was shocked to find that she had not changed her dress at all.
"What are you going to wear tonight, Mother?"
"Wear where?"
"Why to dinner, of course."
"My dear child, what do I usually wear? I think this print will stand up very well under the strain. Why?"
"Well, nothing, only with Mr. Lloyd coming—"

"He is not coming on a social invitation. He wants to consult your father. I felt rather sorry for the young man, and so I just told him to drop back in time for dinner."

Well, I could hardly get dressed up after that. So I put on a violet linen dress I had had that summer and put on some white pumps. Mother said I looked nice, which made me rather doubt the effect. As a matter of fact, Bruce scarcely saw me, I guess. He seemed awfully worried. We tried not to talk about Connie, but of course the subject would come up.

Mother and Dad really liked Bruce, and I am sure everyone can guess what I thought about him. But brother Allen acted as if he almost hated him. He was awfully nervous all during dinner and excused himself right afterward to go to the library. Of course, I knew Allen was crazy about Miss Sinclair, had been terribly upset over her death, and was now jealous of Bruce because he had been her fiancé. Mother was concerned over Allen's nerves.

As we sat in the living room after dinner, it was harder than ever to keep away from the case. We just did not try to at all after Dad brought in the evening paper. It certainly gave us food for conversation. . . . Hym, the Filipino, had been found in San Francisco!
