Becoming Venerable

The public museum was opened to the public on January 15, 1759.

SYNOPSIS

Lovely, young Cathleen McCarthy tries to discourage the attentions of Seward Ingram, her employer's son because of social barriers, but he insists on seeing her. Seward presents Cathleen with an expensive bracelet. She plans to return it but her shiftless brother, Joe, steals the bracelet and pawn it for $300. Cathleen tries to get an advance on her salary to retrieve the bracelet.

Homeless Alpaugh, Ingram's confidential secretary, insinuatingly offers her a loan and she is furious. Alpaugh speculates with his employer's money in the hope of securing money to meet his faithless wife's extravagance. Marian Alpaugh is having an affair with the Marquis d'Alhué. Arline Martin, an actress, tries to induce Ingram to finance a show written by her sweetheart. Ingram refuses and Arline threatens revenge. The Marquis d'Alhué offers the Russian raid rubies to Mrs. Ingram.

CHAPTER XX

When, a day or two later, the rubies were laid before her, she was a little disappointed at first by the inartistic settings. Also they were so large, it was hard to believe they were real. After she had handled them for a few moments, observed the lights in the stones, the steady fires in her heart, she changed her mind and became enthusiastic.

"They'd all have to be reset, of course," she said.

"They were worn like this, Mrs. Ingram, by Queen Maria in the Escorial."

"She'd be surprised, I imagine, to see what a modern jeweler can do with them. They're beautiful stones! I'd like to have them, and I appreciate your thoughtfulness in first offering them to me. But I'll have to talk to Mr. Ingram. You'll wait, though, for my final answer before showing them to anyone else, won't you?"

"The evening, quite confidently, Laura spoke to her husband of the rubies."

"It's a remarkable opportunity, Jasper. It isn't every day royal jewels like these are offered for sale. They're beautiful."

"My dear, ordinarily I'd be delighted to get them for you, but I'm afraid it's impossible just now."

"Now, Jasper? Why?" she demanded.

"Business conditions are uncertain, you know. It's not easy to lay your hands on ready money."

"But, Jasper, a tiara, and a sort of medallion, I saw in the window of a jewelry store. It's the opportunity of a life time. Besides, they're a sound investment. Surely half a million—"

"Half a million! I'm sorry, Laura, but right now every dollar I can scrape up I can use. I'm taxing my resources to the utmost to gain control of enterprises that later on will make spectacular returns. People are selling out, letting go all around. It's a time when power can be consolidated. Why, every day I pass up opportunities because I haven't the money to take advantage of them. I'm extended now, more than I have any right to be. I walk up and down my office saying to myself, 'God! If I could only get hold of some money.'"

"If I don't give the Marquis a favorable answer in a few days, he'll offer the rubies to somebody else," said Laura not in the least impressed by his dismal statements.

"Somebody is going to buy them. Maybe Grace Albin will. Of course they'd look ridiculous on her, but imagine my feelings, Jasper, at the opera this winter, if I saw her wearing the Infanta Josefa's rubies! I'd wear them with white lace, and a ruby velvet and ermine wrap—of course, not as a tiara and dog-collar. I'd have them made into a necklace and bracelets. I think, set so every stone would swing free. It would be startling."

"Out of the question, my dear," he said impatiently. "I simply can't do it."

Jasper had denied her requests so seldom that she was stunned and angry. She decided now that she had to have those rubies. In her eyes, they became more desirable than anything on earth. One way or another, she'd make Jasper get them for her. Or if he wouldn't or couldn't, maybe she could, herself, in some way raise the money. She had to have them.
