NOTICE TO TAXPAYERS

Notice is hereby given that Monday, May 4, 1936, will be the last day to pay your Spring Installment of taxes. The county treasurer's office will be open from 8 A. M. to 4 P. M. during the tax paying season. All taxes not paid by that time will become delinquent and an 8% penalty will be added, an additional 1% will be added for each year tax remains unpaid from first Monday in November in the year the delinquency occurred. Those who have bought or sold property and wish a division of taxes are asked to come in at once. Call on the Auditor for errors and any reductions. The Treasurer can make no corrections.

The Treasurer will not be responsible for the penalty of delinquent taxes resulting from the omission of tax-payers to state definitely on what property they desire to pay, in whose name it may be found, in what township or corporation it is situated.

Persons owing delinquent taxes should pay them at once, the law is such that there is no option left for the Treasurer but enforce the collection of delinquent taxes. County orders will not be paid to anyone owing delinquent taxes. All persons are warned against them. Particular attention. If you pay taxes in more than one township mention the fact to the Treasurer also see that your receipts call for all your real estate and personal property.

In making inquiries of the Treasurer regarding taxes to insure reply do not fail to include return postage.

JEFF LECHEY
Treasurer Adams County, Indiana.

Plan Improvements At Ft. Wayne School

Fort Wayne, Ind., Apr. 9.—(U.P.)—Approximately $250,000 has been set aside by the Indiana state budget committee for the construction of two new dormitories and a power plant at the Oak Park colony of the Fort Wayne state school, it was announced last night by Dr. W. F. Dunham, general superintendent of the school.

Construction will start July 1, when the funds become available. Dr. Dunham said the new buildings are another step in the state's plan to transfer the Muscatatuck Colony at Butlerville, with 600 patients, to Fort Wayne.

London.—(U.P.)—Since 1920, Arthur W. Neve, of Mildenhall, has collected 51 jobs. And he still holds them all. "I can't help it," he says. "Jobs seem to come my way, whether I want them or not."

Four Are Killed In Latest Border Clash

Tokyo, Apr. 9.—(U.P.)—Another serious Mongolian border clash was reported in a Nippon Dempo News agency dispatch today from Swenfenho.

It said 14 Japanese-Manchu soldiers, surveying near the border, met 14 Soviet soldiers who opened fire. The Japanese-Manchu troops returned the fire and the Soviet force retreated after four Japanese-Manchu soldiers had been killed.

"THERE'S MURDER IN THE AIR" by ROY CHANSLOR

SYNOPSIS
Beautiful Ruth Tyler, blind daughter of former District Attorney Daniel Tyler, is psychic and foretells murders, but is powerless to reveal enough information so that the tragedies can be averted. These manifestations occur while Ruth, a talented musician, plays her violin—and always at night. The girl becomes terror-stricken and suddenly this strange power grips her. Her father enlists the aid of Dr. Jan Karasc, noted psychiatrist, but as Karasc is working on another case, he sends his young assistant, Nat Benson, to study the girl. Nat is introduced to Ruth as the son of her father's college chum, in the city on a visit. One night, when Ruth has a spell, Nat prevents Tyler from trying to soothe her, with the result her vision is keener than ever and she is able to reveal the name of the person marked for death. This time it is Paul Y. Gordon, an international banker. Nat telephones Gordon, warning him his life is in danger. Next morning, Nat, Tyler and Ruth call on Gordon. He is skeptical of Ruth's psychic powers and does not take the warning seriously. He claims he knows of no one who would want to kill him. Tyler is exasperated and the trio leave. Checking up on Gordon, Nat learns there is no record of his past beyond 1917 when he became a member of the firm of Street & Company. In that year a member of the company, David Grahame and his wife lost their lives on the "Lusitania" and Gordon adopted their daughter, Doris. An autobiographical sketch states that his second marriage was to Carlotta Montez in Madrid in 1916. Beyond that Gordon's life is sketchy.

The autobiography also reports that he married Eleanor Cummings in Chicago in 1904, yet the Chicago Bureau of Vital Statistics has no record of that, nor is there any record of the birth of his two children. Everything now depends on Ruth. Three nights later, she gets the warning that the assassin is about to strike. Nat calls Gordon and Ruth screams, "Lookout! Someone is about to fire!" Gordon flings himself sideways in bed and simultaneously there is a spurt of flame and a pistol-shot. He comes to with his family around him. In the group are his wife, Carlotta, his children Helene, David and Doris; Johnson, the servant; and Nelson, a guard. In dodging the shot, Gordon struck his head on the table, becoming unconscious. He telephones Tyler.

CHAPTER XI

In the house in East Seventy-ninth Street, Daniel Tyler, an arm about Ruth's shaking shoulders, was trying to soothe the blind girl. Her nerves still quivered from the shock; and her great dark eyes, so normal in appearance, were dilated. Nat, who had hurried for a glass of water for Ruth, hovered about helplessly. Then the phone rang, and he seized it quickly. His face lighted up with relief at the sound of Gordon's voice. He covered the mouthpiece with one hand and said reassuringly to Ruth and her father: "It's Gordon! He's all right!"

Then he was listening again. The trembling shoulders of the blind girl were quiet, suddenly. With her father, she pressed close to Nat, as he talked to Gordon. "Amazing!" they heard Nat saying. "Certainly. We could come at once. Very well. Tomorrow morning, Ten!"

He flashed Tyler a look. Tyler nodded.

"Ten it is, Mr. Gordon," said Nat. "Good night."

Nat turned toward the eager faces of Tyler and Ruth. "There goes a shot," he said; "but thanks to your warning, Ruth, he threw himself out of the way. He did strike his head against a table, but it's nothing serious."

Ruth drew in her breath sharply. "And the—the killer?" she half-whispered.

Nat shook his head, puzzled. "Haven't found a sign of him yet," he said.

"Then—it will come again!" Ruth whispered. "Oh, I know it will come again!"

"See," Johnson said. "An agile man could gain that ledge from the balcony."

"Search the house too," said Gordon.

"Aye," said Nelson. He gave a little salute and was gone.

Gordon surveyed the others, slowly. Helene and Doris, like Carlotta, were in negligence. David wore a heavy silk dressing-gown over his pajamas, Johnson a woolen bathrobe.

"You all heard the shot?" Gordon asked.

There was a chorus of affirmations, excited nods and everyone began to talk at once.

"Reading in my room," he heard David say. "When I heard—"

"—had just turned out my reading light," Doris was saying.

"—was asleep," said Carlotta. "I woke with a start—"

"—was lying awake, in the dark," Helene said.

"—and when I got to your door it was unlocked," Johnson's voice it was, stronger, rose above the others. "I hurried in and saw you lying—"

"Just a moment," said Gordon sharply. "Which door was unlocked?"

"Why, the hall door," said Johnson. "When I saw you—"

"Yes!" said Gordon.

"I ran to your side," said Johnson. "I thought you'd been shot. Then I saw you'd hit your head on the table. The bullet missed you and plowed right through the bed. Look at that hole in the mattress."

Gordon stared down at the bed. "The shot came from the direction of the window," Johnson said. "See how the hole runs."

David had dropped to his knees and was peering under the bed. He gave a sharp exclamation, and rose, holding out a misspoken slug in the palm of his hand.

"That's right," he said. "It must have come from the window. It went through the mattress, struck the iron rail at the side, ricocheted up against the springs and then dropped to the floor."

Everyone stared at the bullet in David's palm. It was an ugly thing. Helene gave a little shudder and covered her face with her hands. Johnson went to the window and leaned out. David joined him. Johnson pointed to a ledge about five feet below the window, clearly visible in the moonlight. It extended along the entire side of the house, three or four feet above the tops of the series of French windows opening off a balcony which ran along the second floor.

"See," Johnson said. "An agile man could gain that ledge from the balcony. And the balcony is easily accessible from the ground. He could have stood on the ledge and fired through the open window."

"By George, you're right!" David exclaimed.

The others, except Gordon, clustered about the window, peering down excitedly, talking, exclaiming. They turned at Gordon's voice. "But the hall door was locked," he said quietly but positively. "I locked it myself before I went to bed."

"Then maybe he came in the window and escaped by the door!" David said.

Helene gave a little cry of fear. "Then he's still in the house!"

Doris moved to her quickly, put an arm about her trembling shoulders.

"If he is, the men will soon find him," she said soothingly.

Gordon flashed her a look of admiration. She had nerve, that girl!

From the driveway came the sound of a car. Headlights flashed for a moment against the window.

"That will be Dr. Grace," said David. Then he took command, turning to the three women. "You'd better all go to your rooms. Johnson and I will stand by."

"But I'm afraid," Helene quavered.

"I'll stay with you," said Doris gently.

"Please," said David. "Go to your rooms."

"No," said Gordon. "My sitting-room. It's safer there."

David nodded. Doris, her arm still about Helene, gently urged her toward the door to the other room. Gordon nodded at Carlotta to follow.

"But I must stay," she protested. She placed her hand on his head and argued, softly. "My place is here."

Gordon smiled up at her, kissed the white hand.

"Thank you, darling," he said. "But you'd best go too."

She shook her dark head in rebellion.

"Please," said her husband. She hesitated a moment, then bent swiftly and brushed her lips against his and as swiftly left the room. Doris and Helene followed. The bell rang, and Johnson went to admit the Doctor.

David stood near the bed, looking down into his father's face, gravely.

"Do you—do you think it was he?" he asked.

Gordon put both hands over his eyes in a sudden gesture.

"My God, Dave," he said. "I don't know."
