BEHIND the SCENES in HOLLYWOOD

HOLLYWOOD—where a child has a 35-year-old stand-in.
It goes on right now on the "Angel of Mercy" set at Warners. The youngster, Billy Mauch, who plays a drummer boy for the British troops in the Crimean war, steps away when the scene is over, and Sid Dawson, a 35-year-old former jockey, takes his place while the cameraman is lining up the lights for the next setup.

You haven't heard much about Billy Mauch yet, but will after "Anthony Adverse" is released. He played Fredrick March as a child, and his trouping brought him back out here for the Kay Francis picture. In "Anthony Adverse," Billy's stand-in was his twin brother, Bobby.

The Jack Oakies are closing their honeymoon apartment after about a week. Neither could stand the idea of a month's separation, so Venita will accompany Jack on the location for "The Texas Rangers." They'll live in Gallup, N. M., and motor to the location every day.

A laugh from the day's news. King Vidor was interviewing prospects for "The Texas Rangers" when a lanky chap stepped up.

"I think I may be able to help you," he said, "because I used to be a Texas ranger."

Under questioning, it developed that the fellow had been in New York for the last two years.

"What were you doing in those two years?" asked the director.

"Oh them?" drawled the Texan. "I was waiting for a chance to get on Major Bowes' hour with my guitar."

Movie chorines are scrambling for jobs in "Never Gonna Dance," for each of the 25 girls selected by Hermes Pan will hoof it for a moment with Fred Astaire for a partner. Girls over five feet five are automatically eliminated because they have to look small in comparison to Astaire, who can't look over any tall fences.
