WEALTHY JEANNETTE PARKER OFFERS ARDETH NEW POSITION
CHAPTER IV.
WHEN Ardeth and Bet emerged from the house early fog still flooded the street. They squeezed themselves into the packed street car. An anxious, time-conscious crowd, smiling of damp overcoats and cold lunches.
The depression of the Harrison flat followed Ardeth as far as the transfer point, where Bet left her. Bet worked in an insurance office further downtown.
Once she was alone a weight slid from her mind. The sense of some brave, bright adventure just ahead seized her again. She was coming into her own world once more.
Ardeth liked the store where she worked. It's brightness was stimulating after the drab untidiness of the Fell Street flat. She liked the color—the motion—the sure, decisive pattern of it. Some-how decent it was; putting order in one's life.
Most of all she liked the Oriental art department where she worked. It was a snug world of beauty closing comfortably about her. The cloisonne vases—the Beninese bronzes—the little bronze Buddhas and Chinese embroideries—these lovely exotic things helped her dream. They were removed from the gray reality of life. They were a fitting setting for dreams of Ken Gleason.
Ever since she had wakened this morning Ardeth had been fighting off the thought of him. The memory of yesterday was a warm glow deep in her heart. In the gray discord of the Harrison home she had withdrawn her thoughts determinedly. Incongruous to think of him there.
But here, in this quiet colorful corner—here with the gleam of silks, the burnished bronzes, the ascending blue spirals of incense, she could dream.
As yet her feelings for Ken Gleason were too vague to be called love. This was only the first gentle flush in the sky before sunrise. A time when she was happy merely remembering little things—the way the morning sun had glared on his hair until it shone like a metal helmet.
Remembering the strange long glance he had given her. Eyes of blue... fighting blue... Had she read that somewhere?
In the middle of the afternoon she was jolted from her dreamy calm. Her heart gave a bound. Coming down the aisle was Jeanette Parker—Jeanette, who had been in the same group with Ken yesterday.
Ardeth was busy with another customer, but Jeanette waved at her. "I'll wait—want to talk to you." She seated herself on a teakwood tabourette and drew a cigarette case from her handbag. She was a dark, almost sullen looking girl. Quite conscious she was that she was a member of the wealthy California Parkers. Conscious, as well, of the correctness of her smart tweed ensemble—of the richness of her furs.
Jeanette posed at being "different." In this role it had pleased her fancy to strike up a casual friendship with Ardeth Carroll, a friendship patronizing on Jeanette's part; frankly admiring on the part of the other girl.
It was this last quality which stimulated the affair, for admiration was very sweet to Jeanette. Under her carefully maintained cool poise lurked a very demon of

ARDETH HOPES TO MEET KEN THROUGH JEANNETTE
Ardeth Carroll works in a shop and is being wooed by Neil Burke. Her home life is far from pleasant. She lives with an aunt and a snooty girl cousin. Riding with Neil, Ardeth is thrilled by the flattering gaze of handsome Ken Gleason, accompanying the wealthy Cecilie Parker. He is Ardeth's idol.
jealousy. Jealousy of her younger sister, Cecilie, who was the beauty of the family and the favorite of her parents.
Jeanette hid her true feelings well. Watching her smoking now, with that easy air of half-scornful amusement, no one would have guessed she was raving with wounded pride. Cecilie had shone at a dance last night, totally eclipsing her older sister and Jeanette was out for revenge. Revenge, which Ardeth Carroll, all unknowing was to help her get.
"Come back for that sandalwood fan you were looking at last week, Miss Parker?" Ardeth asked as she came up to Jeanette.
"No! Something more important. You!" Jeanette blew a cloud of cigarette smoke down her long thin nose and looked mysterious. "Ardeth, love, you and I are going into business together."
Ardeth regarded her with puzzled eyes.
"I'm fed up on society stuff," said Jeanette loftily. "I'll kick and scream if I have to go to another tea or dance or a bridge game! I've become an Earnest Worker, Ardeth. I'm going to open a shop and you must come and run it for me."
Ardeth looked her astonishment. "A shop? You?"
A Parker turned shopkeeper! Jeanette smiled. Very pleasant to have this girl's obvious admiration. Soothing to vanity, brushed by years of playing second fiddle to a younger and prettier sister.
"Yes, infant. A shop—I!" she nodded. "I told you I was utterly fed up on the social end. You've no idea how I'm run ragged, Ardeth. The price of popularity, I suppose!" She shrugged with an air of comic helplessness. "But I happen to have a mind which demands food—and I'm out after a career, darling." She dipped the ash from her cigarette airily.
The other girl stared at her, uncertain how to take this.
Ardeth could not begin to guess at the tangled events which had led up to this moment.
What Jeanette would not admit—even to herself—was that this sudden decision on her part was a pose. It was to be an excuse for not shining socially as did the younger and prettier Cecilie.
Jeanette was already practicing little spiteful remarks about "idle women" which she would toss off to admiring male acquaintances—hoping they would take the hint and mark the difference between her own efficiency and her sister's frivolity.
"Her business" would provide a convenient excuse for refusing invitations to dances and house parties where she would be a wallflower.
"I love to go, of course," Jeanette would say airily, "but I'm a working woman now, you know... My business... I'm so devoted to it—!" She would give a little expressive shrug. That line should go well with men.
She went on. "I'm going to open a small specialty shop in the finest shopping district. No special line, you know, but the newest and most expensive novelties. The latest perfume. Or slipper buckles. And Spanish shawls. And I want you, infant, to come and tend shop for me."
She knew what she was doing, did Jeanette. She did not intend being tied down to daily duty behind a counter.
So long as it pleased her she would play at "keeping store." But she wished to be free to put on her hat when the mood would her, to drift to the St. Francis or the Fairmount in the afternoon to boast of her business over the tea table.
Ardeth was to be the crew. Jeanette would be all the officers.

ARDETH HOPES TO MEET KEN THROUGH JEANNETTE
"I'll pay you whatever you're getting here..." she went on capably. "I must have you with me!"
Ardeth had turned away and was absently shoving about a package of incense with one slender finger. Her face was carefully businesslike, but her heart had set up and exciting pounding.
Instead of Jeanette's torrent of words she was listening to a tremulous inner voice. Ken Gleason—he had been in the Parker group yesterday. If she went with Jeanette—some day Ken might come into the shop—he would speak to her. Was this to be the way?
She tried to tear her distracted thoughts away from him. This was an important move... Here where she now was, there was an assured future. If she went with Jeanette she would be dependent upon a rich girl's caprice.
How the sun had gleamed on his hair yesterday! And that strange movement when his deep gaze had met her own and had been unable to glance away.
"Well..." Jeanette's voice was half amused, half offended.
Ardeth had the impression of being in the grasp of some fate too strong for her. The sense that she was being breathlessly hurried along—to what?
"—All right, Miss Parker," she heard herself stammering. "I'll take it. When do you want me?"
Jeanette's black eyes snapped. She was suddenly feverish for action. "When you can get away from here. I want to open in time for the Fashion Show. I know of a place on Grant Avenue I can rent."
"The end of the week, then?" There was a frightened and exulting note in Ardeth's voice.
"Done!" Jeanette rose and crushed the cigarette in an ash tray. "I'll run along and start the wheels turning. I'll see you tomorrow—!"
She departed in a glow of action and importance. Already Jeanette was boasting in her mind to an imaginary audience. "I hired this girl. I had in mind and inside of a week the place was running, my dear! I'm like that when I start anything—red hot decisions—!"
Ardeth was swept by her doubts and fears. Yet under the thoughts, which she tried to make deliberate and staid, was beating the consciousness of Ken Gleason. Fate... rushing her toward him.
That night, at the dinner table, she announced her decision to an unappreciative audience.
Aunt Stel regarded her from beneath knit brows. "Be sure you don't come to grief with your high and mighty ideals," she said darkly. "Your fine friend will get tired of her scheme over night and you'll find yourself holdin' the bag, my girl!"
"Think you're going to bust into society?" inquired Bet sourly. "I suppose we'll be reading all about you running with the Burlingame crowd now you're so popular with the Parkers! Well, they aren't marrying shop girls, let me tell you that!"
Ardeth's golden eyes blazed under level brows. "You'd tell me anything, Bet—providing it was nasty enough!" she said in a low, shaking voice.
And the real battle came with Neil. He was waiting in the dark when she let herself into the house the next evening.
She gave a little startled cry as he stepped out of the shadows and grasped her arms. In the thick light his face was white and the black eyes burning down into her own were wild.
