GIRL UNAFRAID BY GLADYS JOHNSON

ARDETH CARROLL is just a shoppirl, leading a very simple life, but her ideals are high. She looks beyond the drab existence marriage to Neil Burke would mean. Seeing handsome Ken Gleason with Cecile Parker, society belle, Ardeeth's heart leaps. When Cecile's sister, Jeanette, opens a specialty shop, she asks Ardeeth to take charge. Ardeeth meets Ken at the shop. Shortly after, knowing Jeanette has left for the day, Ken calls, feigning he had planned to drive Jeanette home. He asks Ardeeth to go instead. Ken plans a foursome of Ardeeth, Jeanette, Tom Corbett and himself. Jeanette and Tom are unable to go, so Ken is alone with Ardeeth.

Ardeeth Made Happy By Kens Amorous Attention

CHAPTER VIII.
WHEN Ken had told of Jeanette's absence, desolation unbearable had swept Ardeeth. She was like a disappointed child. Her lovely day—her beautiful day—snatched away at the last minute! Then came angry rebellion. She'd go with Ken anyway! Suppose there were but the two of them? People weren't prudish about such things any more! She would go—she would! They were defiantly gay coming over on the ferryboat, thrilling to a daring sense of romance. Blue bay—blue sky—and the sun gleaming on the man's uncovered head. There was a little crease in his thick hair where the hat brim had pressed, a crease which would just hold her finger, thought the girl dreamily. Then she had given a little startled laugh at the thought and would not tell him why she laughed.

This golden day dropped into her lap, far removed from the other gray days of the week. Nothing mattered—Aunt Stel's nagging, Neil's jealousy—Cecile Parker—not even tomorrow, which would put the worldly girl between them again. Nothing mattered while she was here with Ken on this golden day!

The thrilling sense of intimacy deepened when they left the boat and turned from the city. The country road they followed gave way to a salt-cracked track winding through the salt marsh. Wide sky—wide flat—the blue creep creeping along with Ken and herself. When they reached the ark they were filled with the wild spirits of children. Ardeeth exclaimed over it all—the shabby cabin with its cushioned seat rambling around the room. The looking over miles of marsh. The floor boards of the sun-flooded deck and the soft slipping of water as the tide seeped up the slough.

She tied a huge flour sack dish-towel under her armpits and helped Ken prepare lunch on the rusty wood stove. From the back of the car Ken produced a thick becfatak. A jar of potato salad, French bread—butter—cheese. A box of French pastry had been badly jammed in the trip over and sent them into gales of laughter. It was easy to laugh today.

Just the sight of Ken with a dish-towel tied about his neck, solemnly licking whipped cream from his fingertips, was sufficient to move the girl to tender ridicule. Just the sight of a sooty smudge streaking Ardeeth's nose was enough to start Ken's shout ringing over the marshes.

They were thoroughly aware of each other's presence. Aware of the empty miles which closed them here together. They battled their secret excitement with an almost hectic gaiety. They burned their fingers and broke plates. They dropped forks and dived for them at the same moment so their heads came smartly together. They salted the salad too much and entirely forgot to season the steak.

Ardeeth cut her finger and Ken bound it with a strip of clean dish-towel. That moment of close contact, when he held her hand in his own, silenced the man's high spirits and sent the blood surging through his body.

They ate lunch on the shady side of the deck overlooking the blue bay. Ken was in hilarious spirits again. He played waiter, hanging a napkin over his arm and waving Ardeeth to her seat with an elaborate flourish.

"Ham, lamb, ram, sheep or mutton? Name your animal, leddy!"

Ken Maintains Silence On Subject of Cecile.

couch, a crimped little heap, watching him with deep eyes. With the lighted cigarette Ken came back and sat down beside her. His eyes were dark, but he managed a faint smile. "How can I help it when you're so sweet?" he asked. "You think I'm sweet?" And he was on fire again. "The sweetest thing in the world!" he said between clenched teeth. "All day I've been fighting to keep my hands off of you. I wanted to kiss you the first time I saw you—I wanted to reach in the window and pull you out!" "That wasn't the first time," she said faintly. "No," he agreed more steadily. "I saw you first in the park. We looked at each other—and I couldn't get you out of my head all day." He gave a harsh little laugh. "And what a scowl I got from the fellow you were with! He could have killed me!" The thought of Neil intruding between them, spoiling the enchantment of the moment. Ardeeth made a little impatient gesture. "Oh—he doesn't count. Just a friend," she evaded. They avoided each other's eyes. Both stared out over the marsh. Still so thrillingly still. The sunshine had deepened in tone—it had taken on the deep golden tinge of afternoon—a mellow tone somehow sad. Miles of sun-baked saw-grass and blue bay. An empty world in the center of it just they two.

Ken had pitched his cigarette over the rail. She felt his eyes on her face. . . . Then again she was drawn into his arms. His ardent face poised just above her own, between his narrowed lashes his eyes were dark as ink. "Crazy about you, Moth!" She voice shook though he tried to make it light. "Like me a little?" "A little?" She tried to smile and knew her lips were trembling. "A lot?"

His breath was warm on her lips. "You're beautiful, Moth. Too darn beautiful! There ought to be a law against you!" She tried to smile and felt tears sting her eyes. "As beautiful as Cecile Parker?" She could not help that slipping out. A small silence dropping between them, darkening the day. His arms slipped from her. He sat upright and his eyes went out across the marsh.

"Cecile . . ." His voice was dry. "What brought her to your mind?" Ardeeth moistened her lips. Her eyes were fastened on his tense profile.

"Oh . . . nothing. Just because you were with her that day I saw you in the park, I suppose. You—you're great friends, aren't you?"

"Oh, sure," he answered carelessly. "The Parkers are old family friends of ours. There's just mother and me left in our family, you know. When I finished my engineering course at college, I went into Mr. Parker's office. They've all been mighty decent to mother and me."

Something creeping between them . . . darkening the bright day. "I thought . . . I thought . . ." she stammered. "You thought I was rolling in money—like the Parkers?" he finished the thought for her. "Thanks for the compliment. I'm just a poor working man, Moth. Supporting my mother like the heroes of the Henry books I used to read when I was a kid . . ."

Something odd in his tone when he spoke of his mother. Ardeeth looked up quickly. He was staring across the marshes, lost in thought. His eyes were narrowed painfully. Just a fleeting expression, gone as soon as she noticed it—gone as the cloud shadows passed over the sloughs.

As though he felt her eyes he looked down and his arms tightened about her shoulders. Blue fires kindled in his eyes and he smiled.

"Why all the conversation, sweetheart, when I could be kissing you?" (To Be Continued.)
