FIRST MAYOR WRITES

member of the newspaper's staff is grateful for the splendid cooperation being received on every hand—from the merchants, manufacturers and business men, for getting their advertising copy in early and from those who are writing special articles for the edition.

Many pictures, covering a wide range of subjects, will illustrate the paper throughout. There will be striking aerial views of the city. And the advertisements in the newspaper themselves will be of unusual interest, as many of the merchants, business institutions and manufacturers, with type and illustrations, are telling their own stories of achievement and relating the value of their institutions to the community.

The historical value of the paper will make it desirable for preservation in many homes for reference, and those who wish extra copies are asked to place orders well in advance of the publication date. Its circulation will be from two and a half to three times the regular daily average, as it is planned to distribute the Centennial edition to every home in the county. The paper is being published one week in advance of the Centennial celebration in order that it may be used to give widespread publicity to Decatur's one hundredth birthday gala celebration, August 2 to 8.

GIRL UNAFRAID BY GLADYS JOHNSON

WHAT HAS GONE BEFORE.
Life to pretty Ardeth Carroll meant working in a shop, an unhappy home with her aunt, and the courtship of Neil Burke, to whom marriage would mean a continuance of her drab existence. When fate in the guise of the socially prominent Jeanette Parker, offers her the chance of a shop she is opening, Ardeth accepts. Her happiness knows no bounds when she meets her idol, Ken Gleason, often seen with Cecile, Jeanette's younger sister. Ardeth and Ken see much of each other. Announcement of Ken's engagement to Cecile stuns Ardeth. Ken denying his engagement, explains it is his mother's wish that he marry Cecile. He confesses his love for Ardeth. Unable to oppose his mother, Ken hopes to win her approval of his marriage to Ardeth. Neil quarrels with Ardeth about Ken. NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY.

CHAPTER XV.

"Yes—he's slaving!" came Neil's bitter answer. "Got an easy berth in old Parker's office and going to get solid in the firm by marrying the boss's daughter. And in the meantime he thinks he can have a good time with my girl. I'll show him where he's going to head in!"

"You—bully! If you try to see him I—I'll—!" She blazed at him through the uncertain light, eyes and teeth agleam like a small out-raged cat.

Suddenly she was flung flat against him, held by his arm as rigid and uncompromising as a steel bar. His teeth showed in a smile which held no mirth, his eyes burned down at her from their shadowy sockets. "You know what? You'll give him up if you know what's good for you! Think you can throw me over whenever you please!"

A door up at the head of the stairs suddenly opened, sending a glare of light leaping down the stairwell, painting black, angular shadows of balusters on the grimy plaster walls, flinging into relief their struggling, locked figures.

Angry Words.
Aunt Stel's voice sounded, harsh with anger: "Ardeth! Come up here right off! What time of night is this to be getting in an' waking the whole house?"

Ardeth thrust Neil violently away and went up the stairs burning with rage and shame. Wearing a black scowl, the man followed. They faced each other in the blaze of the living-room chandelier. Aunt Stel had evidently just arisen from her virtuous couch, for the kimono of faded irides did not quite conceal the end of a much faded nightgown and her front hair was wound on two stout wire hairpins to provide a rigid wave the next day.

Neil stood beside her, his long arms folded tightly against his taut, lean body. His face was paper white and his eyes were very black under his thick, black brows.

Ardeth stood before them with flaming cheeks, her slender body taut with excited anger.

Aunt Stel's eyes went heavily over the girl, much as a lumbering wagon would crush a moth. "So, you finally decided to come home, did you?" Her voice was thick with scorn. "Remembered you had a good, decent home to come to, when you got good 'n' ready! An' me, like a fool, keepin' your dinner hot in the oven till all hours!"

"I'm sorry about dinner, Aunt Stel," the girl said with stiff lips. "I know I should have telephoned, but—but I lost all track of time."

"Yes, I can believe that," Aunt Stel's lips were a thin line. "You forget most things since you've started chipping around with your rich beau! I dare say that isn't all he's made you forget!"

The girl before her blazed with sudden wrath. "That's horrid! I've done nothing I'm ashamed of and you've no right to talk to me like that! It's nobody's business but our own if we love each other!"

She stopped, swept by a guilty sense of betrayal. Putting it in words like this made it sound so bleak. . . . This love of theirs—so newly confessed—so delicate. . . . Flinging it out before Aunt Stel's skeptical face was like handling a butterfly with clumsy fingers.

"Oh, so you love each other, do you?" Aunt Stel's words were freighted with sarcasm. "Fallin' for all his fine promises, aren't you. Like Nellie Ross. She had plenty of times to remember her sweetie's fine words, an' so'll you have."

"Married!" hotly, from Neil. "Married!" a derisive cackle from Aunt Stel. "Well, let me tell you, young lady, you're not pulling the wool over my eyes! Bet knows all about your fine sheik—there's a girl works in her
