Latest News Of 4-H Activities
In Adams County

4-H Calf Club
The Adams County 4-H Calf Club met recently at Monroe. The meeting was called to order by the president, Joel Habegger. This was followed by the roll call and the reading of the minutes by Juanita Lehman. The new club constitution was read and approved.

Yells were led by LeRoy Schwartz and music was furnished by the Harden Bros. Paul and Warren.
Katherine Lehman discussed the purpose of demonstrations. David Mosser demonstrated the making of a lead baiter for calves and Gerardeth mopped her eyes in cold water. Combed her hair. Moving with slow deliberation, like one drugged.

She thought, "I must not act queer. People will look at me." She walked down to the store, grateful to the rain which made it possible to shut out the staring world with an umbrella.

Little Ah-Ling looked at Ardeth anxiously as she entered the store.
She knew much—this discreet eye, soft spoken Chinese girl. Moving lightly about the Smokerie, handling tea cups and cigarettes, gossip came to her ears. Many of the patrons of The Caprice would have been startled did they guess just how much Ah-Ling knew of their private affairs. Startled and more than a little worried.

So now Ah-Ling knew the reason for Ardeth's white face and listless manner. Ah-Ling was distressed. She was fond of Ardeth and she disliked Ken.

She slipped out to a nearby restaurant and came back with a pot of tea and some toasted muffins. As she put it down on the desk where Ardeth was balancing the cash she said softly, "Eat this.
My father always said we should never meet grief on an empty stomach."

The days were away like a long nightmare. This was one of the big storms of the year. Few came into the shop and the Smokerie had no patrons.

At four-thirty Ardeth went to the back room and took down her wraps.

stopping outside. Footsteps, voices echoing in the entrance.

Ardeth's face went white and her eyes were dark with dread.
She slipped to her knees, crouching against the pillar.

Six people coming up the nave.
Cecile and Ken. Cecile's father and mother. A friend of Cecile's —Vivian Aldrich, who came sometimes to the Smokerie. A man she had never seen before.

Ardeth's sick eyes went over Cecile—beautiful, immaculate, despite the stormy day.

The minister came out of the vestry door. Ardeth was dimly aware that he was speaking to Mr.
Parker, even as she was dimly aware of Cecile whispering to her mother. But her anguished gaze was on Ken now, devouring him, her heart in her eyes. Staring until the candles at the altar became a golden blur.

Too far to see Ken's face, but the tall young figure held a weary stoop which made Ardeth yearn toward him.

A dream . . . a terrible dream.
Frenzied rebellion in her heart, Ardeth's nails drove into the palms of her hands, breaking the skin. She felt weak, as though the blood were leaving her heart, drop by drop.

The echoes multiplied, vying the spoken word until it reached the crouching girl in a soft rush as though a multitude of ghosts whispered up there in the shadowy vault.

A pause. Cecile's clear metallic voice.

Weak fear lest she faint had swept over Ardeth. She rubbed at her cold cheeks, crouching down behind the pew. Mustn't do that.
Oh, Ken would never forgive her. . .
Shadows and lights and the group at the altar swimming before her sick eyes.

They were turning. Speaking.
Ardeth pressed a hand hard over her mouth and crouched closer to the pillar.

They came down the nave attended by a convoy of echoes, passing close to the pew where a girl crouched in anguish.

Voices on the steps. The roar of a starting motor. Ken. . . going away with his wife. Oh, dear God!

Turning to re-convert the church was startled to see someone come out of the chapel. A girl, who held her head down and rushed wildly past him into the rainy night.

Those bitter moments when she crouched in the church and saw Ken married to Cecile were a turning point in Ardeth's life. Not even Ken ever knew of the hours which followed. Perhaps they were vague to Ardeth herself.
She was living so intently in the mental, that the physical had almost ceased to exist.

Years of misery passed in that single night. And from then on she was changed in some subtle way from the dreamy shy girl she had been. She looked at life with eyes stripped of illusion. But eyes which were unafraid. But eyes fear which had lurked behind all thoughts of Ken—that vague fear of the future—was gone forever.
One does not fear when one does not hope.

Something of vividness gone from her beauty. A dimming of the golden radiance of youth. New depths to the hazel eyes. A strange stillness in her gaze, so that one had the impression of gazing into still and very deep water.
