

Auction School Notes

Our summer school class of prospective auctioneers organized Wednesday, naming as president, Glen Woody of Salem, Ore. Joe W. Griffith of Paducah, Ky., was named vice-president and Vern Hirsch of Lincoln, Nebr., was named secretary.

We enjoyed a lecture by Col. Gartin on "how to open a farm sale," in which the introduction, body of speech, use of jokes and related problems were treated.

Col. Pettit gave us a talk on "use of the voice," illustrating the part played by each of the vital organs of speech. We would recommend that any instructor of general biology, physiology, or related sciences listen in sometime on Col. Pettit's lectures. He covers the material from the angle of a voice teacher, but breaks it down into such simple terms, illustrating his material by such familiar analogy that one need not be a scholar to get it.

In the afternoon, Col. Roy Johnson gave us a genuine getting acquainted lecture.

Rev. Thompson gave a nice character lesson. Col. Gartin gave us a workout in ring work and we feel in shape to sell Col. Reppert anything from tooth brushes to finger bowls when he returns from Marshalltown, Iowa.

Stab Two Deputies, But Fail To Escape

Chicago, July 30—(UP)—Three men on trial for the murder of a Chicago policeman stabbed two deputy sheriffs and slugged a court bailiff in a desperate break for freedom today but were recaptured almost immediately.

The guard stabbed with a file sharpened to razor edge will recover, police said.

The attempted break occurred at Frank Korczykowski, Andrew Bobacki and Paul Jenkot were led into the police "bull pen" at criminal court building for the noon recess.

Wielding their hidden weapons they felled deputies Edward Wing and Edward Tierney and fled back through the emptying court room.

GIRL UNAFRAID BY GLADYS JOHNSON

Happiness and Heartache Hand in Hand.

CHAPTER XLV.

ARDETH spoke of the store then, spoke with a curious indifference. The little shop which for so long had been the dearest thing in life was suddenly a thing outgrown and therefore of little value. Sell the stock. Close it out. When the current bills were paid there would be sufficient sum left to support her for a time. After that—time would tell.

Tom was gone, the headlights of his car dying out along the road. Black night closed down about the cabin; the sharp spring night of the high places.

Ardeth sat before the dying fire in the living room, listening to the whisper of the pine trees outside, and to Ken's deep weary breathing in the bedroom.

It seemed a strange dream. . . Ken's breakdown was more severe than any of them had realized on that first day. Had he stayed in the city—had he been held in a sanitarium against his wishes, he would have rebelled and the results would have been disastrous. But in this soothing quiet, and with Ardeth's continuous presence, he was submissive and content. Nature supplied her own remedy in the form of deep, exhaustive sleep.

To Ardeth time went on in an undisturbed dream. Two days of peace, filled with sunshine and the smell of the pines. Reality could not reach her. Despite the abrupt change, it seemed strangely natural to be here.

There were times when she found her heart leaping as she thought of the shop, but they were infrequent. Hard to imagine the teeming city, the rush of intent humans up here in the quiet mountains.

Convalescence.

Two days—filled with the trees; with the small talk of the house hold. Ken did not gather the true meaning of the situation. Most of the time he slept. When he did rouse his words were dreamy and, after eating, he drowsed off again. His weary mind and body were drinking up rest as a sponge drinks water.

Mid-afternoon of the third day the silence was broken by the sound of a motor. Tom drove up before the cabin and beside him was Mary Eastwood.

Black eyes smoldering with excitement, Mary stood beside Ardeth on the porch. Tom had gone in to see Ken, and Mary fired the opening shot.

"Ardeth, my darling child, what craziness is this? To stay here like this?"

"I know it's not conventional, but sometimes conventions must be thrust aside, Mary dear." Ardeth's tranquil gaze met Mary's steadily.

"Conventions—oh, rubbish!" Mary wrung her hands in her earnestness. "It isn't that I care! Nor Fred. Or even dear old Tom, though I think he's really heart-broken. But—you can't slap the world in the face, Ardeth. What about when you go back?"

"Cecile doesn't matter any more, Mary."

Ardeth shrugged. She had leaned back against the rough splat which formed the rail of the porch and her eyes went up to a tall pine which seemed fringed with silver in the clear light.

World's Opinion.

"Time enough to take that up when I have to, Mary. It was a case of deciding quickly I couldn't let Cecile get Ken even if she wanted him. He needed me. I listened to the world's opinion, Mary, and look what it did—nearly killed Ken. Now he's mine. He is weak and sick, and I'm going to see that he gets well. I'll never leave him again, I don't care what happens."

"But, darling, it will only end in a scandal! Cecile is furious and she's beastly self-righteous. She'll hang on to Ken legally now. Just for spite. Don't you see, you're playing right into her hands?"

The girl continued to regard the pine with a faint smile. "Cecile doesn't matter any more, Mary."

"Not here, maybe. But later. You can't spend all your days in a mountain cabin. And you're not the sort of woman who can get away with this sort of thing, Ardeth. Not the flaunting adventures type. You're too sensitive. Life can hurt you."

"Life has hurt me." Ardeth's eyes had come back to regard her steadily. "And Ken needs me."

"What does Ken say? What does he think?"

Her face was lovely with tenderness. "He doesn't think, Mary. He's like a man drugged. It just seems so blessedly right to him to have me around here that he accepts it as natural. Honestly, Mary, I think that another day of the strain would have been too much an expenditure, that he only missed the mark by $226. The citizen's even forgive the fact that the $226 is on the red side of the ledger.
