Bits Of Gossip Of Centennial

Among the Saturday Centennial visitors were Fred Mayer, manager of the Sturgis Journal and Walter S. Gilbert, secretary of the Sturgis, Michigan, Chamber of Commerce. Mr. Mayer is a son of the late John Mayer, former publisher of the Monroe Reporter. The two men are in charge of the electrical progress celebration which will be given in Sturgis, September 11 and 12. The program is sponsored by the city of Sturgis and the Chamber of Commerce. A unique program has been planned, devoted entirely to electrical exhibitions. Sturgis is dedicating its new Diesel auxiliary plant. Its principal plant is hydro-electric. An invitation was extended Adams county people to attend the exposition.

Fred Koonitz, secretary to Mayor Harry Baals of Fort Wayne, brought greetings from the executive and the city of Fort Wayne to Mayor Holtzhouse and the Centennial committee Saturday night. Mr. Koonitz and several friends visited Decatur and joined in the celebration.

Jess O. Sellemeyer, who with Mrs. Sellemeyer, traveled across the country to be here for the Centennial celebration, was the last man to take a ride on the merry-go-round Saturday night. Mr. Sellemeyer and cousin, Miss Marietta Dailey of Paulding, Ohio, also formerly of Decatur, rode the merry-go-round after 12 o'clock, it being the last ride of the night. Mr. and Mrs. Sellemeyer left this morning for their home. They will stop in Yellowstone National park for a few days.

The municipal parking lots on First street were opened Saturday evening to the public. The horse and cattle shows were held on the two lots during the week. H. P. Schmitt, chairman of the shows, had the tents removed early Saturday and had the lots in shape for motorists in the evening. The thoughtfulness of the committee was greatly appreciated by auto owners. Hundreds of cars were parked on the two lots.

A watch lost by Catherine Knapp was returned to its owner after the loss had been broadcast over the public address system Saturday afternoon.

The good fortune which attended the Decatur Centennial celebration continued Sunday. High winds which arose for a short time blew down one end of the commercial exhibitor on Madison street 35 hours after thousands of dollars of displays had been removed. Only a small hole was punched in the side of the tent.

Former Commanders At Legion Meeting

Muncie, Aug. 10—(UP)—Alvin M. Owsley, United States Minister to the Irish Free State, and Governor Paul V. McNutt, both past national commander of the American Legion will be prominent among the guests of honor at the Legion state convention here, August 22 to 25th. Col. Owsley will review the annual convention parade Monday afternoon and will be the principal speaker at the commander's dinner Monday evening. Governor McNutt is expected to participate in the parade and, as a past state commander, will be honored at the commander's dinner.

Mrs. Melville Bucklestone of Chicago, national president of the American Legion Auxiliary, and a former resident of Hartford City, will be the speaker of note at Sunday's meetings of the Legion and its auxiliary. Mrs. Mucklestone will be a guest at the annual secretaries' breakfast of the women's organization and later will address the joint meeting of the Legion and Auxiliary in Central high school auditorium.

"KING OF HEARTS"

BY EDNA ROBB WEBSTER

SYNOPSIS

Left destitute when her mother dies, Lynn Bartel is forced to leave private school and go to business. She becomes a mannequin for Dunning's, an exclusive Chicago dress shop. Lynn has very few friends as her training has placed her on a higher social level than her fellow-workers and her low financial status prevents her from associating with her own set. She has one friend, however, in Susanne, the stock girl, and she wished their tastes were more in common. All in all, Lynn's life was very lonely. Then one day, a letter comes from her wealthy and pampered cousin, "Doti" Merchon, inviting Lynn to New Orleans for the Mardi Gras. With a light heart and an inexpensive wardrobe, Lynn goes south. She receives a hearty welcome from her Aunt Zola and "Doti." Lynn is given the room her mother had when a girl and her heart overflows with gratitude and grief; grief because it was she, and not her mother, who returned to this lovely home after so many years' absence. Mrs. Bartel had given up a life of luxury for love and comparative poverty. "Doti" is to be queen of the carnival and she takes Lynn to the Patio Royal to meet the four girls who will attend her.

CHAPTER IX

"I adore Chicago!" Mary Kate enthused languidly, tilting her wide drooping hat of coarse pink straw at a more precarious angle. "Aren't the snowstorms just too thrilling—and imagine, the ice clinging on everything. I was there for the holidays one year and whenever I feel positively scorched with this eternal sun, it refreshes me just to remember that stinging cold wind!" Lynn shivered insistently at her words. She thought if you had to plough through wet snow and stinging wind with your hands and feet numb, to get to work every morning, you wouldn't feel so refreshed. But she recalled Susanne's yearning for the eternal sun which Mary Kate renounced, and marvelled at the vagaries of human nature. They were as inconsistent as the contrast of the bright garden and the gray old walls of the patio.

"We'll have a typical French lunch," Doti decided, scanning the menu. "We don't want Lynn to miss a thing on this trip. Shall we have grilled anchovies on toast, artichokes, hot French rolls, pastries and French coffee? What else?" "The chicken croquettes are special here," Jeannie suggested. "I was thinking about a whole French fried chicken. But we'll have that some night for dinner, later in the week. Jack will want to take Lynn to Antoine's, and that's their special. The croquettes, then?"

The service was so slow that Lynn reflected her usual lunch hour would have passed by the time the order arrived, but these girls seemed to be oblivious of the passing of time while they talked continuously. Lynn eyed the salad, which looked to her like a large scaly green scorpion, wondering how to eat it and what part of it was edible. Doti observed her baffled glance and laughed delightedly. "I know its looks are deceiving, my dear, but it really is an epicurean delicacy. No joking. You strip off the leaves—this way—dip the stick into the space and nibble out the little white spot at the end," her small white teeth demonstrating with the succulent morsel, "and lay the rest of it aside. When you have finished the last layer—what do you have?"

"A stack of leaves as big as a bale of fodder," interposed Mary Kate. "And the surprise—the jewel—the piece de resistance—the white heart of the artichoke, which is no larger than the end of your thumb. You marinate that in the sauce and eat it, too."

"But well worth the effort to discover, we assure you," Manda verified her hostess' enthusiasm. "We shall see!" Lynn declared with a spirit of adventure, as she began the leaf-stripping process. The girls discussed their costumes for the ball, tossed familiar names back and forth as if they were bright balls—many of them masculine. Lynn discovered that, whereas northern girls become excited over one boy friend, the southern girl requires a whole corps of admiring attendants, and even then is impatient to recruit more. It looked as if there would be no dearth of masculine attention, and that these girls had been accustomed to its background all their lives.

Of the names which they spoke, Jack's predominated, and it appeared that if Doti and Jack married as naturally as they had grown up together, the feat would not be accomplished without some competition and envy. His popularity delineated more than the usual eligible qualities; but perhaps that was because at this particular season he was the king of all excitement and emotion and interest. And what girl does not solicit the favor of the king?

The luncheon was prolonged with leisurely enjoyment, while each of the girls deplored the many duties they had yet to attend. Finally,

Added to her pulchritude, there was a refreshing vivaciousness about her which was new and altogether fascinating to these pleasure-sated males. The combination of her innate southern charm and spontaneous northern manners was a nuance in their circumspect experience.

One of the few blonde youths among them drawled intimately, "If you're a sample of the girls in the north—why, oh, why did the stork ever carry me all the way down here?"

"What's the difference, now that I've followed you here?" Lynn retorted with a coquettish daring which surprised herself. She wondered if the sweet warmth of that one little cocktail had affected her so quickly, and set the remainder of it on a table with fearful finality.

"If you're a sample of the girls in the north—why, oh, why did the stork carry me all the way down here?"

They paired off to their waiting motor cars and dispersed, only to meet again three hours later, as Lynn discovered, in the lounge of the smartest hotel for cocktails. There were a score of girls, and as many men in white starched linen or sports coats. It seemed that most of them had been golfing or swimming or playing at something all the afternoon, and their hilarity mounted with the passing of the hour. Nothing ribald or indecorous, but their low-nitched voices reached a higher scale and tempo in gay repartee. Again, the babble of their drawing words charmed Lynn, and she sipped her first cocktail with a flame of daring in her deep gray eyes.

It was soon evident that Jack was not among the boys, for which omission Doti expressed her displeasure freely. But Lynn noted she did not lack attention and that her response to it was not indifferent, certainly. Lynn was soon engrossed with attentions of her own and felt as if she moved in a sea of strange faces hovering close and insistent. "You don't believe me, do you?" Must there be a moon and the usual stage setting to make it serious? "At least—a moon," she bantered. "I think I can find that," he confided in a low voice as a tall olive-skinned fellow commanded her attention from the other side.

Soon again, they were speeding out the palm-bordered boulevard. The sun was low on the horizon and the air caressingly soft with a fragrance that was almost tangible. No wonder northerners yearned for southern climate, Lynn marvelled. How could she ever return to the vicious winds and murky gray air, and be content again? Here, the air was golden, delicious to taste and smell. It seemed to flow around her with a warm sweet heaviness, like perfumed vapor.
