COURT HOUSE

Set For Trial

In the foreclosure of mortgage suit brought by the Union Central Life Insurance company against James M. Wright and others the plea in abatement was presented and the court found for the plaintiff to which the defendant excepted. Thirty days were granted to file all bills of exceptions. An affidavit and petition was filed by the defendant, James M. Wright for a change of venue from the county on the petition and writ of assistance. It was submitted and the motion overruled. Exceptions were filed by James M. Wright. The case was set for trial on September 11.

Receivers Appointed

It appeared to the court that the property in the suit for foreclosure and appointment of a receiver brought by the Mutual Benefit Life Insurance company against Frank D. Brewster and others did not sell for a sufficient sum to pay the judgment. The county appointed James A. Hendrick receiver. James Hendrick appeared and filed his bond in the sum of $300 and took his oath. The bond was approved.

Divorce Asked

A suit for divorce has been brought by Flora Mildred Garwood against Ivan Garwood. The case alleges that the defendant beat, struck and choked the plaintiff, left the home and failed to provide for the two children. Notice was ordered, returnable September 14. An affidavit for support money was filed, returnable September 4.

Marriage Licenses

CHAPTER XXXIII

After the first week, she began to feel the confidence of security, as if she really belonged somewhere again, and was there to remain. Of course, she hoped that she would not always be a restaurant hostess, but she closed her thoughts to any voluntary change until she felt very sure of herself and any other future. If Mr. Bauer still retained her after a couple of weeks, she would return to Mrs. Kime's and relax into the comfort of same living once more. But she would not venture too much until she was sure. Recent experiences had developed her caution and intimidated her confidence. Then, one day, Jed walked into the Fireside, glanced about hastily for a table, and saw Lynn. His quick strides covered the floor between them and he took her hand eagerly.

"Gosh, where've you been? We've trailed you everywhere!" Then he noted her costume. "You working here?"

"Yes," she smiled, feeling warm and happy with his obvious concern. "And I like it much better than the 'Charlie'."

"I don't doubt it. But you shouldn't be doing this," he protested with a frown of annoyance. "It's much, much better than doing nothing," he confidently.

"Oh, sure—but look here, if you really need work so badly, I can fix you up. Why didn't you let me know where you were when you left Mike's?" He remembered Jack's anxiety to find her, started to tell her about it; then decided not to, as he looked down at her averted face, so white and lovely against the severe background of her frock.

"I didn't wish to bother you," she replied quickly. "But you came in for lunch, presumably. I'll find you a table," she glanced over the crowded room, chaotic with voices and the clash of china and flatware.

"Well, where and when may I see you?" he insisted, following her weaving haste among the tables.

Lynn hesitated. "Here's a place," she indicated, not replying to his question.

"Look here, Miss Bartel, I want to be friends. I can get you a much better place than this, and I really want to help you."

"But I haven't much experience. There isn't much that I can do," she objected vaguely.

"You can't have experience at anything until you've tried it. When are you free, here?"

"Three o'clock."

"Swell. We'll have dinner together and talk things over this evening. Okay?" insistently.

"All right," she smiled, and gave him her address. It could do her no harm to test his intentions. If he honestly could help her, why shouldn't she let him? Besides, she liked Jed Townsend quite a lot. She felt a glow of happiness at seeing him again.

The next three hours were the longest Lynn had lived for a very long time.

The shaded lights and quiet beauty of the dining-room were soothing to Lynn's weary confusion. A string trio played lilting chamber music, unobtrusively. Waiters glided about noiselessly. Jed had explained. "I thought this would be
