The bombing was so heavy that the entire city was shaken. The windows of the United States embassy, more than a mile from the scene, rattled violently every time a bomb fell.

Committee Meets
(Copyright 1936 by United Press)
London, Dec. 2.—(U.P.)—Envoys of 27 nations, meeting as a neutrality committee, decided today to investigate activity of foreign volunteers in the Spanish civil war and to propose to the contending factions a drastic plan to exclude foreign war material.

As the committee met, it was learned that information had reached London which purported to show that volunteers for tank units to fight on the nationalist side were being sought at German army headquarters.

Lord Plymouth, British chairman of the neutrality committee, in a speech announced that Great Britain was gravely anxious over the dispatch of foreign military volunteers to Spain.

The committee, named a sub-committee to consider the matter and ordered it to meet Friday morning.

It was voted also to send through Great Britain to Francisco Largo Caballero, premier of the loyalist government, and Gen. Francisco Franco, nationalist dictator, a plan which would seek to prevent the entry by land or sea of war material into Spain.

It was understood that Foreign Secretary Anthony Eden would dispatch the plan to Valencia and Burgos, capitals of the loyalist and nationalist governments, with a request for approval.

A second plan, for supervision of all foreign airports within flying range of Spain, in order to prevent the entry of air craft, was deferred pending approval or disapproval of several governments.

It was believed possible that an angry dispute would mark the meeting of the sub-committee on foreign volunteers among Germany, Italy and Portugal on one side, Russia on the other, due to the intense desire of these nations to insure victory for the nationalists and loyalists respectively and their desire to offer them substantial assistance.

The situation was admittedly a dangerous one.

First news reached British sources that German authorities were cognizant of the dispatch of between 5,000 and 6,000 Germans to join the nationalist forces.

Ice On Cement Steps
Sprinkle several handfuls of salt-peter on cement steps or walks that have ice on them. To keep ice from forming, wash with hot water in which a handful of salt is dissolved. This is better than sprinkling with salt.

Boiling Vegetables

The lid of the vessel can be prevented from bouncing, when boiling starchy vegetables, if a teaspoonful of butter is added to the water.

A Relish
Mix cream cheese with chili sauce, and serve on a lettuce leaf. It makes a delicious relish.

"Sweepstakes on Love"

by MAY CHRISTIE

CHAPTER XXIV

Unaware of all that was going on, Genevieve much enjoyed herself and so even did the old-fashioned homebody, Jerry's mother. They retired shortly after midnight.

Including Diana, who couldn't possibly have slept, the remainder of the party stayed on in the casino.

Falconer scorned the roulette table with its unlucky red that had represented Diana. He was through with her—and and he plunged heavily at blackjack, winning five thousand dollars.

Thereafter, with Dolores as his mascot beside him, he played dice till almost dawn, and was ten thousand to the good.

Regina at his shoulder, Regina slipping endless bills to him, Roger plunged at blackjack and lost again and again.

"Unlucky at cards—you know the rest of it, Roger!" Diana overheard Regina challenge him, her amber eyes full of meaning.

Regina was delighted to be Roger's banker. Probably all his life she would be Roger's banker, thought Diana scornfully.

Diana was "out," and glad of it, she told herself. Surely now she would go to learn the meaning of the word peace.

She slipped out for a breath of air, and just beyond the entrance to the casino, in the gardens, stopped for a moment at the old "wishing-well."

Its iron bucket, suspended by a chain, dripped peacefully into the moonlit water. On the ornamental top, Pancho, the famous parrot, croaked to her in Spanish: "Hello, sweetheart!"

"With a wish, and if I can it'll come true—I'll make it come true, Diana!" came the kind voice of Jerry Nolan.

Her tears fell fast. He took her hand. He said: "D'you mind if a stupid fellow like me expresses the wish dearest to his heart?"

She could not speak. He continued:

"To take care of the dearest girl in the world for the rest of her life is what I wish for. D'you know her name? It's Diana Darlington."

The Old Year was ushered out on Sunday night, and celebrations went on far into the morning.

Late on the Monday afternoon, Jerry's party got into the cars, and sped across the Mexican border back to Hollywood, the hectic week-end over.

It was hectic on the roads, too, because for many miles outside the movie capital, they were flooded.

Twice the occupants had to get out in the rain, because the cars stuck in the mud and debris.

Everyone got wet, and Genevieve developed a very bad cold.

Mrs. Holzer, the landlady of their Hollywood bungalow, nursed her in the beginning, since Diana, willy-nilly, had to be on the set for her picture.

"She's that restless and nervous. I can't keep her in her bed." So spoke the harassed landlady to Diana, the beginning of the second week in January.

"My picture will be finished in five more days and then I'll look after her myself," said Diana, worried.

On the afternoon on the day on which the picture was completed, Genevieve was taken to the hospital with pneumonia.

She was seriously ill. Diana stayed by her mother. The compassionate authorities permitted her to sleep in the hospital.

The studio informed her that she might have a week's vacation, without pay.

But at the end of the week, the crisis had not yet been reached. Diana, lost to everything but her mother's critical condition, remained at the bedside.

Then the tide turned. . . . "She will recover," said the doctor, "but she will need the greatest care and attention, and I recommend that whenever she's strong enough to move, you get her into a good sanitarium in Southern Arizona."

The money? Diana racked her brain about the necessary money for the expenses of the illness and the long recuperation. . . .

For the studio had dispensed with her services, in a curt notice informing her that by overstaying her "vacation," she had made a breach of contract, therefore her contract was terminated.

Regina was at the Diplomat giving lavish parties, entertaining all the important directors and producers and influential motion picture people she could find.

Regina was taking dramatic lessons from a high-priced tutor, because she was a potential Duse or Bernhardt, and all that she needed was a little instruction in diction. Then she would make a sensational debut.

It annoyed her that Clarence had got a job immediately at the studios, but of course it was only because of his comic face and figure and his absurd English accent!

Roger was definitely out of the movies, via the route of the grapevine system that appears to run from studio to studio in Hollywood. Because he had annoyed Falconer (so he explained it), he was black-listed.

But with Regina madly enamored of him, what did that matter? He had discovered that she was a potential Duse or Bernhardt, and all that she needed was a little instruction in diction. Then she would make a sensational debut.

after in Jerry's own comfortable trailer, extended on Jerry's couch, Genevieve was transported in easy stages to the sanitarium. . . .

Love—a warm, human love—came to Genevieve in the famous lung resort.

He was not rich, in the sense that Jerry was wealthy, but he was a good-looking lawyer in the late forties, with a comfortable New York practice, and pneumonia brought on by the icy wintry weather in the big metropolis had brought him to southern Arizona, where they met.

"He's a darling, mother! You'll marry him! He'll take such good care of you," said Diana with tears in her eyes.

It was wonderful to see Genevieve strong again, and looking so lovely, these early Spring days.

Genevieve yearned for New York, for her cozy little house, for the faithful Beza, for her old friends.

"Yes, I do care for him, Diana," she said now, quietly. "He's a fine man of a good family. But what of you, my darling?"

The announcement of Roger's marriage to Regina had been published in the Arizona newspapers only that morning!

Did Diana care? Was she hurt? Would Jerry have his innings?

Did Diana mind that her movie career had been such a short one?

Diana did not. Almost from the beginning, Diana had realized she had little acting ability.

Hollywood had excited and interested her at first, but now she had lost interest, and would like to return East.

"Jerry is going to produce his own musical, Mother. He wants me to go back with him."

"To New York, darling?" Genevieve's eyes were wide with anticipation.

Diana nodded. She smiled, blushed a little, and gave out the big news. "A week ago I promised Jerry we would be married, Genevieve. I'm so happy about it!"

Jerry's wedding gift to Genevieve was the $20,000 mortgage on her house which he paid off.

All that he possessed was Diana's, he told his pretty bride as he kissed her after the double ceremony in Arizona, for Genevieve's wedding took place jointly with that of her daughter, and they all traveled back to New York together.

The Hollywood house was sold. Mrs. Nolan was to migrate between her beloved home-town of Moorefield, Iowa, and the big metropolis.

Though I shan't disturb the young couple too much," she beamed to Genevieve, on her first visit to the Park Avenue apartment.

Regina and Roger went to live permanently in Paris, which they declared was their "spiritual home."

"Home is where the heart is," said Jerry, his arm about his young wife as they gazed from the terrace at their apartment over the shining waters of the East River.

"Wherever you are, Jerry, darling, is my home!" Diana told him earnestly.

THE END.
