German Envoy Visits Survivors

Dr. Hans Luther, Germany's Ambassador to the United States, is shown leaving the Paul Kimball Hospital at Lakehurst, N. J., after visiting victims of the crash of the dirigible Hindenburg. Many of the survivors of the tragic explosion are badly burned, and hospital facilities in the vicinity of Lakehurst are taxed to the utmost.

more thousands of people into London to join the hordes already jamming the streets.

All known "cranks" and eccentrics generally, Britons and foreigners, listed as having fancied grievances, were put under surveillance and will be watched until King George and Queen Elizabeth have returned to the safety of Buckingham palace after the coronation ceremony.

Special bodyguards also watched all the royal personages and the statesmen here to honor King George and his queen.

But these precautions were unobtrusive, and the hundreds of thousands of people awaiting the coronation knew nothing of them. They woke to another day of showers, with the threat of a thunder storm in the oppressive air, and a day of round-eyed walking the colorful streets in search of new sights.

Stage managers of the coronation ceremony were nervous. A slip in the complicated ritual of crowning a king is easy, for it is an event that takes place only once in a lifetime.

A high cleric who assisted in yesterday's dress rehearsal and will participate in tomorrow's ceremony told the United Press today:

"That was the final rehearsal and it left much to be desired. We need another—or better still, two more—to insure smoothness and preclude slip-ups."

But this cleric, like everyone else, expressed hope that everything would go smoothly tomorrow and the weather men, though they would not be positive, forecast:

"Unsettled—some prospects of sunshine."

Regardless of weather, all the scheduled state processions will be held.

The first of the gorgeous state functions of coronation week was held last night when the king and queen were hosts at Buckingham palace to 450 foreign royalties and envoys. James W. Gerard, American envoy, wore his new knee breeches. The famous royal gold dinner service was on display, though not used. It is valued nominally at $2,500,000. But as it weighs nine tons and is solid gold, it probably is worth upwards of $7,500,000.

The entire vicinity of Buckingham palace was crowded with sightseers.

All during the dinner, the thousands pressed against the iron fence of the palace grounds chorused: "We want the king." Every royal personage was cheered to the echo. Groups paraded back and forth carrying the Union Jack, singing "God save the king" and shouting for the king and queen to appear on a balcony.
