CHAPTER XVIII Jonathan watched him roll down the steps and into his car. When he heard the door slam he turned away. He went back to his desk and sat down and picked up a book and looked at it.

Jonathan's eyebrows shot upward. He said, "But I thought that Doctor Mason—"

"Mason," interrupted Sutton, "is a sick man. Been sick for months. Going away to recuperate... doubt if he'll practice much when and if he returns. Hasn't really practiced for that matter for some years."

"You're young, your practice hasn't reached great proportions as yet, so an outside job would not interfere. Besides the school work would put you in closer touch with our little community," he said carelessly, as if he spoke of an indulged child, "and you've all sorts of up and coming and modern ideas... Mason, poor old doc, hasn't had a new idea since the Spanish War."

Jonathan shook his head dazedly. He said, "But..."

"Too many buts. You're always butting in," said the Senator, and laughed heartily at his own merry jest. He slapped Jonathan on the back and gave him a brightly banded cigar—"told you I had 'em made for me in Havana, didn't I?" he asked.

Jonathan got to his feet and went to the door with him. It occurred to him afterwards that if he had had an objection he had not been given an opportunity to voice it.

"I like you," boomed the great man, at Jonathan's door. "We need more young men like you in the town. And if I'm not betraying a secret, Sally likes you, too."

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE ONE) ous words of esteem and affection. Intimate association with you in the work of the court has been to me both enjoyable and inspiring, and I shall carry into my retirement happy memories of that association, together with profound respect and true affection for each and all of you."

Several minor incidents at the court's last meeting for the term yesterday increased speculation as to new retirements. In a case involving California natural gas rates the tribunal upheld a lower court decision by an evenly divided court, four justices voting either way.

He had not, however, forgotten Rose. He called her and Mrs. Ward told him that she had gone out with Bill Lynd. He hung up, feeling rather let down.

He was trailing upstairs, the magazine and books under his arm, contemplating a lazy hour or so and prayerfully hoping that he wouldn't be called out, when the door bell rang. He dropped his burden on the stairs and went down to answer.

"I've office hours, Sally." "Oh, drat your office hours... must you have them every night?" "I'm afraid so," he said, laughing. "Well, look then, how about the nine o'clock movie and back here after? I'll drop around and wait for you. No. I won't listen. I'm coming anyway. And if you won't see anyone but patients, I'll break a leg. Devotion can go no further..."

He had no time to call Rose during the day. His office hours in the morning were taken up with three patients each with an interminable story and then he was called out. He managed a sketchy dinner under Evelina's disapproving gaze and then made some calls in town. On his return he found a message from the country and went on out again. He wished before he had gone very far on the hard-packed ice and snow that he had hired the cutter again. On the way back he stopped to see the Peters' baby and came home to find three messages on the telephone pad.

Evansville Tent City Is Ordered Abandoned

Evansville, Ind., June 3—(UP)—Abandonment of the Evansville Red Cross tent city, erected shortly after the January flood, was ordered today by local officials.

The refugee camp, which still houses 16 families totalling 79 persons, is expected to be closed by the end of this week. Tents are being deserted daily as families move back to their rehabilitated homes.
