SEMI-PROS TO START SEASON HERE SUNDAY

Molly Mies' Team To Meet Ft. Wayne Colored Giants Here

Tomorrow afternoon at Worthman field the Decatur semi-pro baseball club will attempt the difficult task of meeting the Fort Wayne Colored Giants and attempting to take their honors away from them.

The Giants have a team which boasts of being second to none in Northern Indiana. Since it will be the official opening game for both nines anything can happen in their efforts to start the season with a win.

Molly Mies, manager of the Decatur team, stated late this afternoon that he has added a Fort Wayne player to his line-up who is touted to be plenty handy with the stick. Mies did not disclose the player's name but said he was well known in athletic circles.

One of the features of tomorrow's game will be the using of a baseball which was personally autographed by Babe Ruth. It is planned to attach a little ceremony to the occasion by introducing the man who held the ball while Ruth scribbled his name.

The battery for the Decatur team has not been announced but is probable that Mies will toss them in for part of the game, with Vauhan Snedeker receiving. Mies was for many years a pitcher in the minor leagues, and briefly with the Philadelphia Phillies. An injury to his wrist incapacitated Molly for the season and ensuing injury kept him out of the big time permanently.

The game will be called promptly at 3:00 P. M. Admission prices will be 25c for adults and 10c for children.

Blood Pressure Found Affected By Two Glands

St. Louis (U.P.) — High blood pressure is due to a lack of balance between the sympathetic system governing the circulation of the blood and the energy-controlling adrenal and thyroid glands, according to Dr. George W. Crile, one of the founders of the Cleveland Clinic.

Dr. Crile told the American College of Physicians meeting here that a close relation between the two is found in all animals and in man.

He said the relation exists because the glands, on speeding up oxidation and increasing energy through a substance poured into the blood stream, create a demand for an increased supply of atmospheric oxygen brought to the tissues by the blood pressure consequently may be obtained by reducing the activity of either the glands or the sympathetic system, depending upon which is the offending mechanism.

Dr. Crile reported that in 84 operations, high blood pressure had been reduced by first reducing activity of the sympathetic system. However, he said further observation of the patients would be necessary before a final judgment on the value of the operations could be made.

YANKEES HOLD LEAGUE MARGIN

Ruffing Blanks Browns; White Sox Troupe Washington

New York, June 12—It was just a breeze for the New York Yankees as Joe and eleven homers of the tenth and eleventh homers of the year and Charley the Red Ruffing pitched a five-hit shutout to maul the Browns, 10 to 0.

The victory, second in a row for the Yanks, maintained their one-game lead in the American league race, while snapping the Browns' hopeful winning streak at three straight.

They gave Geek Bonura an automobile as Chicago's "most popular player" and the big first baseman showed his appreciation by banging out four hits, driving in five runs and leading the White Sox to a 14 to 8 victory over the Washington Senators.

CHAPTER XXVII

The narrow escape from drowning of the son of one of Riverport's leading citizens was a nine days' wonder in the town and indeed in the county. Even the downstate papers copied the item. Millie, very ill from shock and in the hospital, came in for her share of sensational reporting and Jonathan and Rose's part in the rescue—"house guests of Miss Sally Sutton on the famous Sutton Island"—was well played up.

Rose, and Jonathan too, would have liked nothing better than to forget the whole business. It seemed to Rose that that trip back to the Island was the longest she had ever undertaken. When they reached there Sally was down at the dock with the house servants and even her mother appeared, literally wringing her hands and, for once, jarred out of her lethargy.

Millie was taken to the house where Jonathan worked over her until the men returned from the mainland with the bigger boat. By then the storm had cleared, as suddenly as it had come. The river flowed steadily toward the Gulf and the sea, dimpled, blue, imperceptibly placid. Only the broken branches of trees, the drenched soil and Millie, crying ceaselessly in the bed room in the Sutton house, remained to remind them that there had been a storm.

"She's all right," Jonathan told Rose, coming out of the room and leaving the youngster in charge of an efficient maid, "just shock, and, of course, bruises. But she needs absolute quiet. . . the hospital would be better than her home at present. I think I'll take her there."

"Her parents must be told at once."

"They've a phone, haven't they? I'll talk to them. Perhaps you'd better drive up and see them," said Jonathan, "and try to explain. . . as much as is discreet," he added, frowning.

"No. Tell them to go to the hospital at once," advised Rose, "and you'll bring Millie. . . I'll go along with you."

"O.K. Good girl," he said briefly, and put his hand on hers. For a second they remained quite still in the wide corridor of the house. They were alone; they could hear Millie moaning faintly and the maid speaking softly to her; they could hear Sally talking to her mother below stairs; they heard Larry's voice upstairs and querulous. He had demanded and received a stiff drink, and dry clothing and was downstairs with Sally and her mother.

"You must change your clothes, Jon," said Rose definitely. "Sally put out something of her father's for you. . . You're soaked to the skin."

Jonathan thought ruefully of his discarded blue flannel coat, his new, once white trousers, and grinned. He said, "My ice cream pants shrank. I'd look swell in the Senators' wouldn't I?"

"Larry can send across to his house and get some of Phil's clothes. One of the servants went over and brought some back for him," she said. "I'll tell him."

"Wait a minute. . . He laid his hand on her wrist. He said, "I haven't any words to tell you what I think of you."

She did not answer but looking at him she found her regard so deeply plunged in his own that it seemed as if she could never look away. But at last she did, and ran from him, down the corridor, down the stairs, her heart singing. It had been a horrible experience, and she realized dimly that they had not heard the last of it by a good deal. She was sensitive to impressions and lasted only a little more than two innings after winning his first six games this season. Lloyd Brown who succeeded him left the game during a four-run rally in the fourth inning.

No National league games were played.

Skunks Are Welcome
Painesville, O. (U.P.)—Youngsters here are welcoming the presence of skunks. Hide dealers are paying unusually handsome premiums for their pelts.

Woman, 90, Baseball Fan
Mansfield, O. (U.P.)—Mrs. Mary Hiltabiddle, 90, is one of baseball's most rabid fans. She follows every game on the radio and "eats" up the baseball news.

Band Put On Diet
East Liverpool, O. (U.P.)—An eating taboo was invoked at a high school band festival here. Student players of wind instruments were forbidden to eat peanuts, popcorn and heavily salted foods.

Trade in a Good Town — Decatur

The Philadelphia Athletics assaulted four Cleveland pitchers for 16 hits, including two home runs by Wally Moses, and defeated the Indians 11 to 3. The defeat dropped the Indians into fourth place.

Moses got his first home run off the delivery of Willis Hudlin who had a fighting chance! It was an extraordinary explanation, but it looked as if the reporters had swallowed it hook, line and sinker.

To be sure Jonathan had received both praise and thanks from the elder Dexter and Phil, and Rose had come in for her share, but it was obvious that Larry's fond family as well as the public considered him the hero of the day.

Sam Patten did not. Sam Patten, wringing from Jonathan and Rose a story somewhat approximating the truth, swore and scattered pipe ashes furiously on Rose's living room floor. He said, "It's some someone showed that young scoundrel up for what he is. . . I've a mind to run the real story."

"Don't," advised Rose quickly. "You'll only make enemies. Besides, no one will believe you; they know how down you are on the Sutton-Dexter outfit in general. . . and you're not editing a scandal weekly, Sam."

"Maybe not, but it makes me mighty sick," said Rose soothingly, "but you'll only defeat our purpose in the end, Sam. Just at present they regard you tolerantly as a sort of harmless nut, leaning somewhat to the left, a parlor pink, in fact, as you don't play along with the established rule. But once you show your hand too clearly, before the time is ripe, you're headed for trouble."

"She's right," declared Jonathan, after a moment.

He and Sam, Bill Lynd and the young Bates were at Rose's. Mrs. Bates was out in the kitchen with Mrs. Ward, talking recipes, as befitted a bride anxious to do her best by her husband's digestion. There was a little silence and then Bill asked, laughing but astonished, "Don't tell me you've come over to our way of thinking, Kim—why, you'll ruin your practice!"

Jonathan flushed. He said steadily, "Ragging aside, I've come to the conclusion that whatever Rose—I mean whatever you guys think must be gospel. I'm just beginning to find my eyes opening a little. . ."

"Because Larry Dexter turned yellow?"

"No," said Jonathan, "that's not it. I never had any use for him anyway, as Rose will bear witness. But there's something about the way the whole business has been played up, enhancing the Sutton-Dexter glory that made me see red. Gilding the lily, I suppose," he added, grinning.

"It's a wonder to me that they didn't say that Sally was towing along behind on the end of a rope with a life belt in her teeth and a flask of brandy," asserted Bill absurdly, "the aquatic St. Bernard, beautiful and blonde!"

"Sally," said Rose unexpectedly, "is all right. She was scared and said so. She made no bones about it. She wouldn't have been any help anyway, merely a hindrance, an extra burden and an added danger. And once we got back to shore again, I was impressed by her efficiency."

They looked at her in amazement, and Jonathan smiled at her. Seeing that smile and the instant response it elicited, Bill Lynd's heart sank. He might as well pull up stakes, he reflected gloomily, and clear out alone. Because if he were not much mistaken, Jonathan and Rose had reached an understanding.

So they had. He was not far from wrong. It had been an understanding quite without words, for words were not necessary, as yet. They merely knew, each of them, that they belonged together.
