NOTICE TO BIDDERS AND PROPOSALS

Sealed proposals to the Board of Trustees of the School City of Decatur, Indiana, for the furnishing of labor and materials for two (2) new stoker installations for the two (2) Kewanee boilers in the Decatur High School, Decatur, Indiana, in accordance with the plans and specifications prepared by R. W. Noland, M. E., Consulting Engineer, 219 Medical Arts Building, Fort Wayne, Indiana, up to and until Wednesday, the 14th day of August, 1937, until 7:30 P. M., at which time the bids will be publicly opened at the office of the School Superintendent, Decatur, Indiana. All bids must be made on blank form No. 36 as adopted by the State Board of Accounts. All bids must be accompanied by the data sheet hereinafter appearing in these specifications, said data sheet being completely filled out.

The Board of Trustees reserves the right to reject any and all bids.

Each bidder must submit with his proposal a certified check in a sum equal to 5% of the amount of principal proposal drawn to the order of the Board of Trustees, and the proceeds of such check shall become the property of said Board of Trustees for any reason whatsoever the bidder after the opening of the bids withdraws from the competition or refuses to execute the contract required in the event of said contract being awarded to him.

Checks submitted to the Board of Trustees by bidders will be returned after the approval of the contract and bond executed by the successful bidder.

The successful bidder will be required to execute a contract on a form provided by the Board of Trustees. He will also be required to furnish satisfactory surety bond to the amount of the contract price to secure the fulfillment of the contract.

Plans and specifications relating to any of the above work may be consulted daily at the office of R. W. Noland, M. E., Consulting Engineer, 219 Medical Arts Building, Fort Wayne, Indiana; at the office of the Superintendent of Schools, Decatur, Indiana; and at the office of the State Board of Accounts, Indianapolis, Indiana.

All requests for plans and specifications must be accompanied by a deposit check for $10.00 made payable to the Engineer. This check will be returned to the bidder if the plans and specifications issued him are returned to the Engineer in good condition at the time the proposal is submitted and before the bids are opened. If the plans and specifications are NOT returned in accordance with these instructions, the deposit check will be cashed by the Engineer.

Only bids from stoker manufacturers will be considered, and it is being distinctly understood that the said manufacturer will act directly as the contractor and will be responsible for the entire installation complete.

"THE CAPTIVE BRIDE"

by BARRETT WILLOUGHBY

SYNOPSIS

According to the terms of her father's will, Denise Keith, a young San Francisco socialite, must visit his hunting lodge, River House, on the Stikine River, in Tarnigan, Canada, before disposing of it. Larry Keith, an outfitter for big game hunters, loved the place and had lived there alone for years because his selfish, pampered wife, Sylvia, refused to spend even one month a year there. When he would not give it up, she divorced him and remarried. Aboard Captain Revelry's Stikine Maid enroute to Tarnigan, Denny met a varied lot of individuals enroute to River House for the hunting season. Among them are Dr. Pool Van Cleve, who is suffering from a nervous breakdown; Rio Carey, wealthy divorcee; Derek Haskell, Larry's half-breed guide, with whom Rio is enamored, and Harp MacFarlane, foreman of River House. Harp had spoken about the treachery of the Stikine, praising Bourne's skill as a navigator, saying he was swift to see and lightning to act. Shortly after passing the Canadian border, the Maid ties up on the bank for the night. All on board go ashore to dance. From her stateroom door, Denny overhears Bourne talking with Jack Page, owner of the Taku Wind, anchored a short distance away. Page had broken an agreement between his father and Bourne's to stay away from the Stikine River as there was only business enough for one boat. Bourne offers to buy Page out or gamble for the rights on the river, but Page refuses. "It's war then," Page replies. "Business, that's all," Bourne says. Denny was expecting some excitement, but Bourne placed his hand on Page's shoulder, saying, "Let her ride as she looks. Come along and join our party." Denny felt contempt for Bourne for submitting to the invasion of Page and indignation against the latter. She went ashore so intent on the situation that she did not see Van Cleve and collided with him. Without a word he gathers her in his arms, kisses her and stalks off. Denny is outraged but calms down shortly, attributing his strange behavior to his illness. At the party, Page immediately attaches himself to Denny and he too kisses her. She is furious. When Denny dances with Bourne she is keenly aware of his proximity. "You—you frighten me..." She reached up and like a little girl began timidly patting his cheek. "Don't you see how you—you make me—afraid of you..."

With sudden frantic strength Denny tried to shove him from her. "Oh-h-h... don't, Mister Revelry Bourne!" she pleaded.

Bourne! she pleaded, in small, shaking tones. "You—you frighten me..." She reached up and like a little girl began timidly patting his cheek. "Don't you see how you—you make me—afraid of you..."

Her mind was so charged with dreadful, half-guessed contingencies that she scarcely knew what her tongue kept saying during the eternity before he took any notice of her beseeching voice and the timorous beguilement of her hand.

But at last he raised his head and looked down at her.

"Lord!" he said under his breath, his hands dropping from her throat. "What am I doing?"

Denny missed the self-reproach in his exclamation, for at that instant the river, the moon, the darkness, all whirled together, as he caught her up in his arms. But before she could scream, she realized he was standing still, holding her gently and trembling as he struggled for composure.

"Rev!" Bourne spoke in a voice low and warm and very unsteady. "Denise—you feel like—a little awful of dream."

He set her down very carefully on her feet.

When they stood facing each other, she sensed a change in him. She faltered, "We—we haven't made a very good beginning."

"I made a mistake. I'm sorry. We'll have to forget tonight." In a metallic edge crept into his tone. "But—look here!" As if in quick decision, he raised his hands to her shoulders and held her off at arm's length. There was an admonitory seriousness in his manner. "I'm going to tell you something, Larry Keith's daughter. In this country a woman gets from a man—just what she expects. No girl dares do"—his voice caught on an intake of remembrance—"what you did tonight, unless..."

Denny never clearly remembered the ensuing headlong flight that brought her back to the sanctuary of her stateroom.

She flung herself face down on under a flaying conviction of cheapness when the last and most appalling thought of all sent her back prone in her berth, her face buried in her hands. Tonight she had forgotten Murray—the man she loved.

As Denny lay in the darkness, she became aware of the sound of water flowing past the boat's hull—the Stikine saying things in the quiet of the night. The witch river that had taken Larry Keith from Sylvia. A superstitious awe crept into her heart.

Had her mother felt something like this the morning Denny left San Francisco for the North? She had not been her consistently gay self as she stood with the merry crowd that had come down to the airport to bid Denny bon voyage. Once she had fallen strangely silent and, after a quick, half-fearful look into Denny's eyes, had thrown clinging arms about her and cried in a small, frightened voice, "I'm not making a mistake sending you up there, darling? You'll come back to me? You won't let me anything keep you from coming back to me?"

Had her father summoned her with a purpose to his river-land, where even the waters and the groves incited to drama? "But why—after you were gone?" she questioned aloud.

Her words hung suspended in the room, unanswered, as they had been when she put the query to Harp and to Revelry Bourne. Yet, from somewhere came a sense of comfort; it was almost a conviction. It seemed to her that her father was about to make known to her some secret which his wife, Sylvia, had never learned.

She then came to a sudden decision about Revelry Bourne. Circumstances forced her to go to Tarnigan with him; but she could and would avoid him thereafter. As for Captain Page and Doctor Van Cleve—from now on these two need not exist for her.
