SOLVE DEATH OF TWO POLICEMEN

Four-Year-Old Murders Are Solved After Re-Capture

Chicago, Oct. 11.—(U.P.)—Murder of two policemen four years ago was solved today because three "honor farm" convicts broke out of state prison after serving almost all of their robbery sentences.

The three, James Pogue, Edward Moorehead, and William Hanley, were captured two days after their escape. Moorehead was shot in the process of capture.

In questioning after the capture, state's attorneys announced, Pogue admitted that he, Moorehead, and Sam Turriano shot Policeman John Skopek and Elmer Ostling to death in a robbery attempt July 22, 1933. Turriano was found and admitted, according to officers, that he was present at the slaying, although he fired no shots.

John Boyle, assistant state's attorney, said he would demand indictment and electrocution for the slayers. Moorehead, however, died from his wounds. Hanley will be returned to the Joliet penitentiary to finish his term.

Pogue said he and Moorehead heard through the prison "grapevine" that they were "hot" and would be picked up for the Skopek-Ostling slaying as soon as they were released next spring. Police said they had been investigating Moorehead's part in the shooting, but didn't connect Pogue with it until he escaped with Moorehead.

Dr. Harold B. Cassidy, once convicted and paroled in connection with the face-lifting of the late John Dillinger, told officers he treated Turriano for a gunshot wound shortly after the 1933 shooting. Turriano said he was wounded in the slaying.

BANQUET HELD

Dale W. McMillen, in his talk, thanked the beet growers, the city and the distributors, for their part in the success of the plant. He said that sucrose sugar, whether derived from cane or beets, is the same when it is refined, but pointed out the advantage to this area in the sale of beet sugar.

He described briefly the machinery at the plant which has made it possible to process the beet sugar in the country, which is marketed under the name of Sparkling Crystal White sugar. He closed by saying that the efforts of the salesmen would be well rewarded with the sale of sugar from Indiana's only beet sugar mill.

At the conclusion of the banquet, each guest was given a 10 pound sack of Sparkling Crystal White sugar.

In the afternoon the visitors were taken on conducted tours of the Central Sugar company and other McMillen plants here.
