

Sex Education For You And Your Children

Millions of parents, anxious to safeguard the health and morals of their youngsters, and to meet their inquiries concerning the facts of life and sex in an honest and decent fashion, are puzzled about how to impart this information.

Millions of young boys and girls, adolescents, and young men and women are growing up without proper sex instruction, gathering their ideas of life, love, sex, and mating from prurient sources, risking the dangers of venereal disease and broken lives.

There is a tremendous need for honest, complete, accurate and scientifically correct instruction on the subject of sex and life.

Our Service Bureau at Washington has spent months of research in the preparation of such a booklet. In twenty-four concise pages, it contains ten thousand words of frank discussion of the scientific facts of sex in simple English for the instruction of parents and their children. FIVE MOTOR VEHICLES

PILED UP BY MIS-STEP
Philadelphia — (UP)—Four automobiles and a police motorcycle were piled up here when a woman stepped on the accelerator instead of the brake.

Mrs. Catherine Anderson, 51, accompanied by her blind husband, Add Anderson, was attempting a right-hand turn. Her foot missed the brake and landed instead on the accelerator.

Motorcycle Policeman George Bramlich and four autos ahead of the Anderson car were involved in the subsequent crash. No one was injured.

"Beauty's A Charm" by HARRIET HINSDALE

SYNOPSIS

Don Ames, publicity agent for Bloom-of-Youth Cosmetics, goes to Carterton, Louisiana, to tell Lucy Lee Carter that her photograph has won first prize of one thousand dollars in the nationwide beauty contest sponsored by his firm. He also meets Pearl Carter, ambitious and comparatively young second wife of ineffectual Wakefield Carter. Finding Lucy Lee as lovely as her picture, Ames proposes entering her as Bloom-of-Youth's entrant in the International Beautyquest soon to be held in Atlantic City. Lucy Lee shrinks from leaving Rosemead, her home, and Clyde Dixon, her sweetheart. But she consents in order to help her father and to send her young brother, Juddy, to school. On boarding the ship at New Orleans Lucy Lee gets her first taste of the staring crowds and flashing cameras that are to mark her career as beauty queen. At the New York pier Don Ames meets the party with more news photographers and the usual publicity ballyhoo reception. That afternoon, they go on to Atlantic City. The following morning Ames meets his old friend Neville Preston, stage and screen idol. Preston tells him of a thrilling adventure he has had the night before, when a beautiful young girl, entering his room by mistake from the balcony, fainted in his arms. Ames, realizing the girl is Lucy Lee, tells Preston, who is now a Hollywood director, that his protegee is about to be crowned "the most beautiful girl in the world." Preston promises she shall have a small part in his next picture and Don rushes to break the news to Lucy Lee.

CHAPTER XI

A contract for six months, at three hundred dollars. At first she thought he meant three hundred dollars a month, and that seemed perfectly wonderful. Daddy Carter signed the paper after a few weak protests; and though he would never admit it, she was certain he too had thought three hundred dollars meant a month's salary. How Mr. Ames laughed at her.

"It's three hundred smackers a week, Lucy Lee," he explained. "Three centuries each and every seven days, with commissions deducted, of course. Not bad for a little girl fresh from the country, huh? And by the end of the six months, you just watch me boost the figure. Why, inside of a year I'll have you in the thousand-dollar-a-week class and Poppa here will be thinking up new ways to dodge the income tax!"

Beneath her rouge Pearl was actually pale with excitement. It seemed from what Mr. Ames said they were going to be very rich, and all because Lucy Lee was beautiful.

Upstairs in the room again, after promising Mr. Ames to be at the Bloom-of-Youth booth by two o'clock and not be late. The hotel lobby was filled with men and women wearing red and gold badges: Fifth Annual Convention of the Beauticians and Cosmeticians of America. People from all over the United States who owned beauty shops. Other people who manufactured face creams and hair tonics, rouge and powder, here to advertise their wares.

That was why Lucy Lee had to be at the booth this afternoon. Mr. Ames said she must smile at people and be nice to them, so they would want to buy Bloom-of-Youth Cosmetics.

It was all very exciting and confusing. She would have liked to write Clyde about it but there simply wasn't time.

"Three hundred dollars a week! And if it hadn't been for me, it would never have happened." Pearl's voice rose shrilly, as it always did when she got excited. "Hollywood! Just think of it. We're going to Hollywood. Well, I always did believe if you kept your mind on things long enough and hard enough you were bound to get it.

Lucy Lee had never before known anyone like Neville Preston.

"We'll have cars and chauffeurs and a big house in Beverly Hills with a swimming pool and whoopee room, just like all the stars I've read about. And a cottage at Malibu Beach, there on the Pacific Ocean. Isn't it lucky I've kept up with all the screen magazines the way I have? You always called them trash. Wakefield Carter, but now you see!"

She paused in triumph, then added the magic words: "Three hundred dollars a week!"

"I must confess I do not quite understand how this has all come about so suddenly," Carter remarked. "There were questions I wished to ask Mr. Ames, but he appeared to be in such a great hurry I refrained."

"I suppose you don't even know who Neville Preston is?" said Pearl with an air of conscious superiority.

"Well, no, I can't say I do, my dear. However, I gathered from what Ames told us that he had something to do with the motion picture business."

Pearl rolled her eyes heavenward and hands went up in a accompanying gesture. "Listen to the man. Anyone would think you had lived in the heart of darkest Africa. But even there they probably know who Neville Preston is. Why, I've seen him in dozens of pictures. And just imagine, he's right here in this

him. He was so handsome, he wore such wonderful clothes, he said such charming things. He had been to every interesting place in the world, knew almost everyone worth while. At first he had seemed rather old to her, but that impression soon faded away. It was only that she herself felt so inexperienced, so ignorant of the big world.

She thought it very kind of him to have arranged that marvelous contract with the motion picture company and she said so, very seriously, and with her velvety dark eyes raised to his. It was on the afternoon of the last day of the Convention and they were sitting on the beach together, under a giant umbrella. It was a rather secluded spot, with few people near. Before them stretched the matchless jade-blue of the quiet sea, waves continuously breaking softly in lacy foam on the golden sand.

Lucy Lee was wearing a bathing suit bought at one of the smart Boardwalk shops. It consisted of nothing except a pair of blue flannel shorts and a white bandeau, leaving most of her slender body exposed. She felt terribly naked in the thing, but all the other girls on the beach were wearing similar swim togs so it must be all right.
