YOU CAN USE THEM SO MANY WAYS

I've been impressed lately with the number of chilled dessert recipes there are calling for Vanilla Wafers for a foundation—or Vanilla Wafer Crumbs—combined with whipped cream or fruit. They are all delicious desserts, too. So that I'm not surprised at the requests I'm receiving for a recipe for making Vanilla Wafers. Of course, it may be that some of these requests come from women who want to serve Vanilla Wafers "as is". After all, these wafers are about as congenial companions as you can find for the ice creams and sherbets we serve so often in the good old summertime. Then there are the occasions when we like to offer a tall frosty glass of refreshing lemonade or some other fruit juice beverage to the friends who happen to come calling on a warm afternoon or evening. But somehow, these beverages never seem quite complete without an accompanying little wafer or cookie to nibble at between sips.

And here again we find that Vanilla Wafers are just the thing. So it's not surprising that there is a demand for the recipe for these little wafers one can use in so many different ways. Naturally, I'm glad that I have such an excellent recipe to offer you. Here it is:

Vanilla Wafers

1 cup shortening
2 cups sugar
3 eggs
1 tsp. vanilla
Cream shortening and add sugar gradually. Add well beaten eggs and the vanilla. Sift flour once before measuring. Sift flour, baking powder and salt together and add alternately with the milk. Mix until smooth. Chill in refrigerator for 1 hour or longer. Drop by small teaspoonfuls on a slightly greased brown paper placed on a cookie sheet and bake on center rack in oven 10 minutes in a moderately hot oven, 400° F. Amount: 6 dozen cookies.

Here is a delicious recipe combining Vanilla Wafers, strawberries and whipped cream. It is called:

Vanilla Strawberry Roll

Wash and hull 1 pt. fresh strawberries. Save some of the best for decorating. Mash the rest of the berries and add ¼ cup granulated sugar—using more if berries are very sour. Soak 2 tsp. gelatin in 2 tbsp. cold water and dissolve over hot water. Blend into the berries and chill until it begins to set. Fold in 1 cup whipping cream whipped until stiff and sweetened with 4 tbsp. confectioners' sugar. Chill until it seems quite firm. Place a spoonful of strawberry mixture on a vanilla wafer, and place another wafer on top. Repeat until all 40 Vanilla Wafers are used. Lay roll lengthwise on a dish or tray and completely cover with remaining strawberry cream mixture. Place in refrigerator to become set—only 3 to 4 hours. Decorate with halves of berries and if desired, piping and rosettes of whipped cream. Amount: 8 to 10 servings. Note: For individual servings, pile 3 or 4 cookies together with the filling. Cover and decorate and serve on individual dessert plates.

list organization.

The shutdown on Sullivan and Clay county came without any warning. In Vermillion county nearly all road construction projects were shut down last week when a traveling squad of organizers allegedly threatened violence to force workers to stop and in Knox county a strike began Tuesday over wage provisions on the construction of a new gymnasium.

Would Boost Wages

Washington, July 10—(U.P.)—Rep.

Adolph Sabath, D. Ill., today introduced a bill to increase hourly wages of skilled relief workers as demanded by more than 100,000 WPA strikers.

Sabath's bill would eliminate provisions of the 1940 relief act which terminated the prevailing wage policy and substituted a system of security wages. The new system in many cases required skilled men to work twice as long for the same wages they formerly received. Skilled workers suspended work on thousands of projects in protest.

The American federation of labor and the congress of industrial organizations are marshaling their forces to try to compel congress to restore the policy of paying prevailing wages—that is, to pay the same hourly wages on WPA that private industry pays.

Sen. Robert F. Wagner, D. N.Y.,

supported by Sen. James F. Murray, D. Mont., is expected to introduce in the senate a bill similar to Sabath's.

Work projects commissioner F. C. Harrington, standing firm on his orders to state administrators to drop all WPA workers who absent themselves from their jobs for five days, asked his state aides today for data on the extent of work stoppages.

"AIR MAIL BRIDE" by HAZEL LIVINGSTON

CHAPTER XXXV

Marie flattered from Julie to Charlie, and back again. From kitchen to living room, straightening a picture here, twitching a curtain there, bright-eyed and nervous, wanting everything to be perfect for them.

Wait was only too glad to give her the vacation she had refused before.

"I've got so much to say to you! It'll take weeks," she cried.

But after they'd discussed the weather, and Walt's divorce and Julie's giving up the beauty shop, after they'd helped Charlie decide on a garage for his car, there didn't seem to be much to talk about.

"You're looking awfully thin, Marie. Are you sure you feel well?"

"Oh, yes! I've worked rather hard at the office, of course. You're a little thinner, too, aren't you, mother?"

"Me? Gracious, no! It's this new kind of reducing girdle I have. They say it's wonderful, and I know it makes me look better, but I don't know if I can stand it. After all, you just have one life. You say you do feel well, dear? Charlie said he thought you looked sort of peaked, too."

"Oh, yes, I'm very well."

Now what to talk about? They'd used up all the safe subjects. From the first, everyone had been conscious of strain. Before they came, Marie had moved all her and Edward's things out of the bedroom, installed them in the little dressing room back of the wall bed in the living room. Then she'd made up the bed with the best percale sheets with double hemstitching, and dusted and vacuumed, in a fever of excitement.

But when they arrived, Julie insisted on sleeping in the living room wall bed. And all the things had to be carried back into the closet.

Edward didn't say anything. He just looked.

Next, there was a duty call on the Wilsons, a contest in politeness that left everyone exhausted.

When they came back Julie said, "Well, I'm glad you have your own place now. I think it's a mistake for young people to live with their parents. I always did say that. You remember, don't you?"

She tried to make a joke of it, but Edward seemed to have lost his capacity for jokes. He was courteous, polite, the perfect host. He got up early and was gone until evening.

"Getting ready to sell some lots again," he told Charlie. "Made some pretty nice commissions a while ago, but it has been dull during the summer. Of course, you don't expect to sell one every day. But you don't have to."

Charlie agreed that that would be expecting too much.

He expressed the opinion that Edward, too, was overworked, and Marie almost laughed out loud. Then the tears came into her eyes, and she had to duck her head hastily.

With money carefully slipped to Edward in advance, he took them all around town, out into the hills, across the bay to San Francisco, expertly driving Charlie's car, for Charlie, stubborn about "strange traffic," refused to even take it out of the garage.

They had a week of that.

And then, one morning Edward wouldn't get up. "Oh, don't be silly!" he said to Marie, when she pleaded with him. "We're not fooling anybody. I'm surprised they haven't already sympathized with you for marrying a lady lawyer that won't work. They will, presently."

"They haven't said a thing!"

And if I'm willing to pretend and pay all the bills so that you can look like a big shot—

"Now you're talking. Now you've said what's on your mind. Tell your mother's, too. Maybe she'll take you home with her, and let you forget you ever got into this. It'll be nice. Your friend Carson's headquarters are south, too—or supposed to be."

"Edward, I don't know what's the matter with you. Are you crazy? Everybody's been so NICE to you, and then you act like this and say things like that—"

"That's it. I'm sick of having your mother and Charlie be nice to me for your sake. You can tell them to cut it out, with my compliments. You wouldn't live with my folks, and I don't know any reason why I have to live with yours, particularly when I know what they're thinking, and saying behind my back!"

"Now you ARE crazy! You're raving mad! I lived with your family for months, and suffered every minute, and if you think they would let me talk about me behind my back you're still crazier. Not that Charlie and mother do—they don't! Why, when I think of that first day I came to your house as a bride, and they shouted, from one end of the house to the other—"

"If by any chance, you don't know you're shouting now!"

"I'm not shouting!" But she dropped her voice guiltily. She knew she was. Julie and Charlie would hear.

"Yes, it matters what they think, doesn't it? But not what I think. Well, you won't have to worry any more about me. I was going to stay in bed a while and get some sleep because I don't get much sleep any more with you crying into your pillow, half the night."

"I'm going to clear out. I'm going over to Mom's. If you want to keep up the fiction you can say that I'm out of town, or over there to help with the fall cleaning, or any lie you like. And before I go I want to say just one more thing, that I've known all along about your friend Walter Carson's divorce, and why his wife is getting it, and that's ONE piece of wool you didn't pull over my eyes."

She tried to answer. "Oh, you—"

"You—Oh, how can you even THINK—"

Edward was stuffing clothes into a suitcase.

To escape from him, she fled to the bathroom, the only place where anyone can get away from everyone else in a three-room apartment, with four people in it.

Julie's face was red, and Charlie
