"REDHEADS ARE LUCKY"

BY VERA BROWN

Mike Shannon, pretty red-headed magazine counter girl at the Hotel Eureka, is trying to reform one of its spectacular guests—Handsome Larry Regan, sensational young southpaw (left hand) pitcher, whose misconduct has been worrying his team's management. Mike is the chief support of her family. She was not so pleased when "Wish" Major, the club's No. 1 scout, suggested that she might marry the erratic Handsome. But when he fell again for liquor, she rushed to his room to "bring him to" and a most embarrassing scene ensued.
Later that day at the stadium, when "kidded" about "the redhead," Handsome struck Assistant Coach Harper, but he escaped suspension with a warning.

CHAPTER VII

Handsome swept into batting practice as though nothing had happened. Nobody spoke to him. It wasn't until they went back to the showers before the game that Larry went over to Harper. The room quieted down instantly. Everybody wanted to hear.

"I want to apologize, Harper. I lost my temper."

Harper, a little non-plussed at the size of the audience, mumbled something that Larry managed to "ain't got it in for you, you big palooka.
I've just got my orders." They shook hands.

Handsome had done his duty and he went back to his locker and continued dressing.

"Well, well, well!" Dusty Lee shook his head. "I never thought I'd see that cocky rookie come to time like that."

"He isn't fired. For which I'm sorry," remarked Tom Marvin. He'd never forgive Handsome for blowing that game with Detroit, blowing it when Ace had given him the signal. Marvin had been charged with the error for Handsome's bungling.

"You have to be a mind reader to play with that guy!"

"He's just too good looking, that's what is the matter with him. He's afraid he'll get his uniform dirty!" Dusty's voice was bitter. Handsome had had early season publicity which had hailed him as Dusty's successor. "I've seen daffy lefthanders in my day, but he's tops!"

Lee added, "And he's lucky! Anybody else would have been fired."

Later during the fifth inning when the gang was up to bat, Dusty, who wasn't pitching that day, went over to talk to Handsome:

"You must have a rabbit foot in your pocket today, Larry. None of the boys dared call Larry 'Handsome' to his face. 'I haven't' in my pocket. But I've got luck," he replied.

Handsome smiled a completely self-satisfied smile.

"Just be sure it isn't back to the bushes!" Dusty quipped and the boys who were listening guffawed.

Dusty reported to Tom later:
"And right in the middle of it, he asked me to autograph a baseball for him. I should have crowned him.
That kid's got more crust than any freshman pitcher I've seen."

"What do you expect?" Tom was still angry. "The front office pampers him. What's he ever done to deserve it? If he ever pitched two innings without sinking us, it would be different."

"It's Wish!"

"Oh, Wish is an old woman! He discovered the mug; now he's got to make good with him."

"Wish is slippin'. If he brings any more like Handsome up here he'll wreck the team."

Of course, the newspaper men found out about Regan's row with

Harper. Too many people heard and saw it. And too many people were anxious to tell.

That is how it happened, when the afternoon sporting editions came to Mike at the hotel, there on the front pages were glaring stories about Handsome.

The boys hadn't spared Handsome. They made Harper the main guy in the whole rumpus. The gang in the shower room had seen to that.
Mike was in a panic. The story said Handsome had been sent to the front office, that Ace Barnes refused to make any comment.

"It wasn't much of a fight,"

saw it. And too many people were anxious to tell.
