Lost on Mined Ship

Gordon Felts

While four American survivors of the Norwegian freighter Donda, sunk by a mine off northern Holland, described a perilous two days and nights without food or water in a tiny lifeboat before rescue by an Italian steamer, relatives of Gordon Felts, above, drowned, awaited details from ship officials on the tragedy. Felts, 26, a singer of Odessa, Mo., had been on a concert tour. The ship was en route to New York from Antwerp.

Abe Lincoln Park Dedicated Near Troy

Troy, Ind., Oct. 2 — (UPI) — More than 2,000 attended dedication ceremonies yesterday for "Abe Lincoln Park," at Anderson Creek near here where Lincoln at one time operated a ferry.

Principal speaker was James M. Tucker, secretary of state. He said too little attention was paid the formative years of Lincoln's life that he spent in this territory. "It was in those years spent here

"REDHEADS ARE LUCKY"

By VERA BROWN

CHAPTER XXXIII

In March, Mike splurged on clothes. That was because of the Kenyon wedding. She had to go to several affairs given for Bob and Ruth. At the wedding, Mike wore a smart black tailored suit. . . . Her hat showed a large part of her gorgeous hair, and the dull black made her naturally lovely skin dazzling.

"Who's the redhead? Who's the redhead?" the men asked.

"My secretary," Kenyon answered.

"First thing I'd do, Ruth, is to make Bob fire her," advised Don Raye, best man, who had taken possession of Mike and ignored the maid of honor to whom he should have been charming.

Ruth was gorgeous in her white wedding gown and so happy that it hurt Mike to look at her eyes. Seeing Ruth that day, she knew Bob would never be sorry. They were going to Bermuda for just a short trip.

"When summer comes and business drops off, we're going to England," Ruth told Mike. "But first I'm going to insist that Bob gives you a vacation."

"I wouldn't know what to do with it," Mike countered.

"I'll show you," said Don Raye, "if you will let me."

After they'd seen Ruth and Bob off, the younger members of the wedding party were ready for "more fun." Mike tried to make excuses. But Don refused to listen. They made the rounds. Don was amazing and Mike was thoroughly enjoying herself.

Arriving at El Rommaco with the party, Mike went on into the dressing room to freshen up. She heard somebody call her name.

"I thought you were dead or married or something!" Carol Lee swept down upon Mike as she sat down before a dressing table mirror. "Can't you look grand?" she rattled on. "Can't you join us? Who're you with?" Mike explained about her boss's wedding.

"Dusty's away. He'll be in tomorrow with the team. I'm not going on the road trips any more. It got too boring, you know?"

Of course, Mike asked after Dusty. "Better than ever. His arm's swell."

"I'm so glad, Carol."

"They all say nobody knows where Handsome is. I had a letter from Iris, she's in Honolulu." Carol's tone was lower now, more confidential. "She's opening here in a show next August. She has a pretty good part. You know Handsome left her without a cent."

Mike did not point out to Carol that it takes money to get from New York to Honolulu. That was about all the news Carol had time to impart. When Mike went to join the others at their table, she saw Carol across the room at a table for two. She was with Frank Ralston. Mike could never forget his face.

Mike sat squeezed close to Don, listening to all the idle talk around the table. She was suddenly tired. Her thoughts turned toward the letter she had had from Handsome:

"You should see me, Skipper. I've got a baseball team. I'm a manager now. It's the kids from the country school across the road. I never felt better in my life and, right now, I'm experimenting with that old curve. I think I've got the stuff on it again. Mr. Christian says the hand ball I play is good for me, and now and then, I feed the horses, or run the sheep."

How queer the letter seemed here in this noise and heat and din. Was there really such a place of peace and fresh air and quiet?

"What are you thinking about, beautiful?" Don bent down the better to see her face.

"Pine woods, she said with a smile."

"You're a girl after my own heart. Let's shake the mob and go for a ride. I'm sick of this too." They left the crowd amid a lot of jibes, but Don only laughed. Outside the spring night was dark and soft.

"We'll go up to Central Park and get a carriage. No automobile is as good as a night like this," Don Raye had fallen hard. He made Mike's life very pleasant that spring. . . .

It was Don who took her to the stadium one Sunday for the first game she had seen in two seasons. Dusty was pitching and Mike was eager to watch him. There had been disquieting reports about his arm. Things were not as rosy as Carol had painted them. Mike was a little shocked at Dusty's appearance. He looked older and seemed tired. The Yankees sided won, but not because of any expert pitching. The team was hitting that day.

Don talked about it as they drove back from the stadium. Mike just listened. That evening Wish Malone walked into the restaurant where Don and Mike were dining. When he finally caught Mike's eye, he came over to the table. She introduced Mr. Raye and they talked casually for a few minutes.

"Have dinner with me some time soon," Wish said as he left.

Don left her at her apartment house door. It was very late, must have been after one o'clock when Mike unlocked the door of her apartment. She heard footsteps coming down the hall. A tall figure stood there in the half light.

"Mike, I've got to talk to you."

It was Dusty Lee. She hid her surprise, turned on the lights, invited him in. He slumped into a chair, mumbling, Mike observed:

"You look tired."

"I am and . . . well, I suppose you wonder why I'm here."

"I certainly do. You should be home and asleep."

"I pitched today. I'm awfully tired. But I had to wait for you."

Dusty rested his head on the chair back, closed his eyes. "Did you meet Carol while I was away?"

"Yes, I did, Dusty. I hadn't seen her in a long time."

"That's what she told me. . . . Gosh, I don't understand what you see in that guy, Frank Ralston!"

"Women are queer," Dusty hesitated and then resumed slowly: "Well, I've got something to say to you. He leaned forward. "You're still in love with Handsome aren't you?" Mike was silent. "You don't have to answer. After a pause, he asked: "Mike, can I trust you?"

"Yes."

"My arm's bad. You know what happened today. I've known it for a month. Ace won't believe it. But it's true. What I came down here to tell you is, if you know where Handsome is, if he's in any kind of shape, get him started this way."

Mike watched his grey face. Suddenly Dusty rested his arms on the table and dropped his head on them. His shoulders shook.

"Mike, I'm sorry to be such a baby, but I'm licked."

"You can't be," Mike protested. "Why are you so sure?"

"I know it. Not this week, maybe, or next. But this season, I can't face it," he groaned. "My arm's good, it's almost gone. I—I—I'm old!"

Dusty was only 26! Old! Yes, old for big league baseball. Mike shivered. Dusty finally stood up. "I spoke my piece, Skipper. You do what you can. Mum's the word to anybody." He picked up his hat. "But if I don't know where Handsome is?"

"You do!"

He gave her a smiling wink and left the apartment.

The next day, Mike confided in Wish Malone the secret of Handsome Regan's come-back efforts at Iron Mountain, but it took weeks (and the growing weakness of Dusty Lee's arm) to convince Owner Crisp that he might give Handsome another chance. Finally he told Malone to bring Regan back. It was almost mid-season when the former pitching star—in a fanfare of sports page publicity—rejoined the Yankees. Gone was that one-time playboy look. The first news photos taken at airports pictured Handsome as a husky just off the farm, which he was.

Though the fans raved, Club Owner Crisp and Manager Ace Barnes were only civil in welcoming the prodigal's return. But Regan seemed more confident than ever. He even wagered with Mr. Crisp that he would win ten games for the club on this basis: He'd get his old salary if he succeeded; he would get but half of his small new contract if he failed!

Day after day, Regan worked out with the club. Ace seemed to show little interest in what Regan was doing. But Handsome threw all pride to the wind and asked Ace to observe his new curve and fast ball. The veteran manager admitted that they were not bad.

One day, Ace asked Handsome about Iris.

"We're through!" Handsome declared bluntly.

Ace laughed; "You just think you are. She hasn't divorced you, has she?"

"No, but she will, or I'll know the reason why."

"Handsome, don't be a chump. I know women. When Iris hears you're back in the bucks, she'll come running. She'll want some of that sugar. You better go talk to one of our attorneys and see what you should do."

"That might be a good idea," Handsome agreed.

"What about the redhead?" Ace inquired.

"She's here."

"Still superstitious?"

Handsome laughed. "No, just in love."

Ace eyed Handsome for a moment, in silence. Then he spoke and tried to keep all excitement out of his voice.

"Better get her out here to the stadium tomorrow. I may start you from the next day on, Regan was a positive sensation. The baseball world knows about Handsome that August and September. Fans will never forget that phenomenal comeback which put him at the top again. Handsome pitched as though inspired. He was—by Mike and . . . that wager with Owner Crisp.

When he was away on the road, he telephoned Mike twice a week. He wrote her almost every day. He kept sending her little gifts along the route. A bottle of perfume, a book, sometimes flowers.

While Handsome was away, Mike spent hours pouring over newspaper clippings about Regan. They kept her from being too lonely. She was not seeing Don Raye any more and Bob was rather annoyed.

"I think you're being very foolish, Mike," Kenyon warned her, one morning while Handsome was away on the last road trip of the season. "Don't be a swell chap. What's the idea cutting him off like this? I figured you might marry him."

"Don't be a darling, and I like him a lot, that's all."
