headquarters in Bouverie street to make his way to the railroad station through the London blackout. He discussed Chamberlain's reception by the house of commons with his staff and prepared his overnight dispatch.

For the last week he had been assembling equipment for a trip to Norway, having been notified by the government that he would be in the first group of reporters to be taken north with the British forces.

His last war front assignment was in Finland where he covered the Russo-Finnish fighting around Lake Ladoga. Before the war broke out in Finland he was with the British expeditionary forces in France.

Covered The World
Webb Miller's 30 years of newspaper reporting carried him from a Chicago police beat to the capitals of the world and to the front lines.

lines of the war, a career which earned him a reputation as the ace of war correspondents.

His by-line stood for accuracy and brilliant reporting and many of the great news beats of our time came from Miller's portable typewriter under date lines on the Ethiopian frontier, in India, Morocco, the Soviet Union, Italy, Spain, Germany, and the British Isles.

He saw kings and dictators rise and fall; he saw the start and finish of wars and revolutions; he saw peace made and scrapped. His career was summarized in 1936 in his book "I Found No Peace," an autobiography regarded as one of the best of its kind.

Miller was born and attended school in Dowagiac, Mich. He described himself as a timid lad impressed with the works of Henry David Thoreau. In Thoreau's "Walden" he found a pattern for human peace and happiness. As a man he once said, "the philosophy of Thoreau . . . is impractical as a rule of life," but he always carried a copy of "Walden" in his pocket.

Because of what he called his "colorless personality" as a boy, Miller cultivated a "bold front." After graduating from high school he got a job working on a passenger steamboat on Diamond Lake, Mich. Then he became a rural school teacher and later, determined to fulfill his ambition to be a writer, went to Chicago and became a police reporter in 1912.

In his first year he covered 33 murders and six executions by hanging.

In 1916 Miller went to Mexico to cover the Pershing expedition against the bandit, Pancho Villa. It was while on the border that Miller started to work for the United Press.

After a year there, he was sent to Mexico City, thence to Chicago, New York and Washington, where he was assigned to report the senate and the state department.

In 1917, the United Press sent him to London and it was there, during the last world war years, that he had his first taste of reporting from a city under constant threat of air raids. He went to Ireland often during the Sinn Fein uprising and visited the British front.

A year later he joined the Paris bureau of the United Press, and was a war correspondent on the American front during the battles of the summer and fall of 1918.
