TODAY'S WAR

Sebastopol lies south of the mountain range which divides the peninsula. Even if it held out for months, it would be no barrier to a German drive north of the range through Kirsch to the Caucasian mainland.

If the German pincer movement succeeded, its object would be to invest the oil fields and establish a grip on the Caucasus north of the mountain range which runs from the Black Sea to the Caspian.

This prospect raises the question of what Britain may do. The British naturally are deeply concerned over keeping the oil fields out of German hands. They are also concerned over preventing the Germans from establishing themselves so perilously close to the near east and the road to India.

The Germans would have the barrier of the Caucasus mountains to overcome. They might attempt a drive along the coastal railroads to Batum on the Black Sea and Baku on the Caspian, as well as an encirclement by sea.

It has been reported persistently in recent days that Gen. Sir Archibald Wavell, commander of the Indian army, is prepared to throw his forces alongside the Russians in the defense of the Caucasus. Gen. Wavell has close to 1,000,000 men under his command.

The best stand, from the British point of defending the east, would be south of the mountains. Gen. Wavell was reported to have been in Tiflis recently, discussing
