BEHIND THE SCENES IN HOLLYWOOD

By HARRISON CARROLL
King Features Syndicate Writer
HOLLYWOOD—Everything considered, they are very democratic the "Bells of St. Mary's" set. The cop on the door doesn't even ask to see my Oscar before he lets me onto the stage this week. Ingrid Bergman and Bing Crosby, fresh from winning academy awards are about to do a scene in front of a rambling, weather-beaten brick building—a parochial school in an unnamed western community.

Directing them is Leo McCarey, who just won TWO academy awards.

Of course, you know that Bing plays the same character as in "Going My Way," a young priest who is sort of a trouble shooter for the church. Miss Bergman is a nun in a run-down parish.

In this scene, they have just had an argument about a schoolboy who has gotten into a fight—Bing defending him, Miss Bergman defending the use of force.

"Don't forget, Sister," says the priest, "outside, it's a man's world."

"How are they doing, Father?" replies the nun.

McCarey is happy about this line. It's humorous, but it has significance. "These are two positive people," he says. "Their ideas clash most of the way through the picture. Each also is possessed of a ready wit. We want laughs, but we don't want the hero and heroine to seem clownish."

I ask Miss Bergman how she likes working in "Bells of St. Mary's."

"Fine," she says. "Except that I feel like a sort of a road company and Barry Fitzgerald. I know people are going to miss him in the picture."

The Swedish star makes no secret of being thrilled about her Oscar. She says it will occupy a position of honor on the stone mantelpiece in her living room. Crosby will have a niche built for his. Director McCarey will have his TWO Oscars made into book-ends.

My favorite story about McCarey is his answer to a well-meaning friend who argued that he shouldn't follow up "Going My Way" with another picture about the same subject. "The public may get bored," warned the friend.

"Listen," said McCarey. "They have been trying to tell this story for 2,000 years. I guess it will stand another hour and 40 minutes!"

"Come out and see Rudy Vallee get pushed into the water," the man invites me.

I come on the double. It's "The Amorous Ghost" set at R-K-O. Adolphe Menjou and Vallee are arguing on the deck of a riverboat, and Menjou does give Vallee a shove. But the part about the water isn't true. Vallee falls onto a mattress and there's a man there to catch him and ease his fall.

There's more excitement going on outside the sound-stage and listening to Pat O'Brien, Tom Kennedy and an old-time director, Pat Hartigan, engage in a real Irish bull session.

"How did you write pictures in the old days?" says O'Brien to Hartigan.

"The same as you do today," snaps Hartigan. "On the cuff."

They argue and argue about every possible subject and nobody yields an inch in his opinions. Presently, the assistant director comes out on the stage to summon Pat to do a scene.

O'Brien gets up, sticks his jaw out, and says: "The Birth of a Nation" is the greatest picture I ever saw. "The Robe" is the greatest book I ever read and my wife is the greatest woman I ever met, and that's final!"

"Before even two Irishmen can answer, he is gone."
