Cut Japs' Escape In Southern Luzon

Little Resistance Met By Cavalrymen

Manila, Apr. 9.—(UP)—First cavalry division troops neared a junction with airborne forces along Tayabas bay today after a 17-mile advance which cut all Japanese escape routes from southern Luzon.

Front reports said the cavalrymen were meeting little resistance in the rapid advance which carried from Cavinti, on the southeast coast of Laguna bay, to within five miles of the 11th airborne troops holding Lucena, capital of Tayabas province.

A juncture of the two forces would complete the encirclement of virtually all the battered Japanese garrison in Luzon's Bicol peninsula.

The compressing drives by the 14th corps at the northern end of the peninsula and the 158th regimental combat team at the south was taking a heavy toll of the enemy's dwindling forces.

Headquarters revealed that the 158th troops seized the town of Bacon, Philippines entry point of the Trans-Pacific cable, after a 22 miles amphibious hop from Legaspi, which was captured Easter Sunday.

(A Japanese Domei agency dispatch, recorded by the FCC, claimed that American forces suffered 10,242 casualties during March in the campaign around Balete Pass in northern Luzon.)

HALF OF VIENNA

(Continued From Page One) engaged in heavy fighting. The free Austria radio said inhabitants of Vienna were rising against the Germans. Angry crowds demonstrated in the streets of the occupied portion of the capital and hand grenades were thrown at German troops, the broadcast said.

Radio Moscow reported that SS Gen. Sepp Dietrich, ruthless Nazi commander in Vienna, had been assassinated by patriots who pumped five revolver shots into him at virtually point-blank range while he was en route to give a pep talk to his troops.

Dietrich, one of Hitler's favorite commanders, had been in command of the sixth panzer army in the Ardennes breakthrough last December before being shifted to Vienna.

Moscow also broadcast an official declaration asserting that Red army troops had entered Austria as liberators with no territorial ambitions or claims. Russia will cooperate in restoring Austria's pre-Anschluss independence, the declaration said.

Toibukhin issued a proclamation promising that Vienna's liberation was near and calling upon the populace to prevent the Germans from mining the city, blowing up bridges or looting.

He said the Nazi party in Austria would be disbanded, but added that its members would not be molested if they cooperated with the Red army.

BERLIN SAYS

men estimated at a half-million killed, wounded or captured in the past 10 days alone, faced a new threat from the reported paratroop assault on the first army front.

There was no immediate confirmation of the enemy report, which failed to make the usual claim that the paratroops had been "wiped out."

The reported airborne operation apparently was intended to turn the Werra river, southeastern tributary of the Wester, and link up with American third army forces in the Muehlhausen area.

The first army, cloaked by a partial security blackout, already had shattered the German defenses along the Weser river northeast of Hann-Muenden and advanced 13 miles or more beyond the stream.

A juncture with the third army would plant the two American forces on the Berlin side of the last important water barriers west of the Elbe, 100 miles to the east. The Elbe loops back to within 43 miles of the German capital, north of Magdeburg.

Meanwhile, American ninth army troops in the north laid siege to Hannover and struck out beyond the city toward Brunswick, 104 miles west of Berlin, while the British opened their assault on Bremen.
