Left to right: Frock with buccaneer belt; red and white striped dress, contrasting belt; bellhop jacket suit. The modern teen-ager has a distinctive personality with a keen air of originality, so the new tempo in her clothes can be interpreted as a definite style movement. New fashions for this younger group have been designed with just these ideas in view. They have good basic lines, sturdy and colorful fabrics and smart styling. The new push-up elbow length puff sleeves, bulky skirts with wide pilgrim backs and roomy basque bodices are popular details. The three frocks shown above are good examples of the chic and practicability of these clothes. Three-quarter length puff sleeves, midriff clasped with a huge buccaneer belt and the side folds of the skirt which give way to a center kick-pleat are style notes in the first model. The red and white striped dress, center, has a self-material bow at the neck, and buttons down the front. It has a wide contrasting belt. Strategically placed buttons set in line, and buttons down the front. A nipped-in waistline give a military air to the bellhop jacket suit shown right. The high neckline and soft, full blouse sleeves achieve a feminine effect that is important shown right. The skirt has gathered fullness at the front. (International)
