

Top left, dressy afternoon handbag; below, barrel shaped daytime bag; right, over-the-shoulder bag.

This season some of the newest bags were designed to harmonize with the current trend toward that important dressmaker feeling. Josef, one of our famous bag creators, has adapted a wide range of quality fabrics and materials into distinctive silhouettes employing the fine construction and workmanship which has always characterized his bags. Three of them are shown above, at the top left a dressy afternoon type made of suede with a latticed, gold finished frame, and below, a barrel-shaped daytime model in calf, which has double handles that are pulled through gold-plated rings and a hidden mock tortoise, petal-like frame. At the right of the picture is an over-the-shoulder style that combines felt and calf. There is a curved slit pocket on the front of the bag, and springflex opening is another detail. This style promises to be one of season's most popular accessories. (International)

Ball Studies New Anti-Strike Bill

Industry-Wide Basis Walkouts Opposed

Washington, Nov. 11 — (UP) — Sen. Joseph H. Ball, R., Minn., said today he may introduce a bill in the new congress to outlaw any industry-wide strike which could jeopardize the national economy.

Ball said his study of the problem was not complete but that the answer might be elimination of industry-wide collective bargaining in such basic industries as steel, coal, oil and railroads. A general tieup of any one industry could be avoided, he said, if unions bargained with only a portion of it at any one time.

"Industry wide bargaining is dangerous and intolerable when it leads to industry-wide strikes," he said.

Ball's statement came as industry and labor shook off the last government controls and moved back into a period of unrestricted collective bargaining to settle their problems. The war-born controls went out the window over the weekend on President Truman's orders.

The only exceptions are plants, mines or facilities seized by the government to end labor disputes. In these the government can fix wages and working conditions by negotiating with the workers.

Some quarters feared the de-control of wages and prices would lead the giants of industry and labor into a test of strength that would bring a wave of strikes and a legislative stalemate between the president and the Republican-controlled congress on how to deal with walkouts.

Mr. Truman described his de-control order as a step toward "increased production and fewer work stoppages." But the next 90 days plainly will be critical in labor-management relations.

Union officials and government economists believed the first result or decontrol would be price rises which would add to the pressure for wage increases. They saw the biggest immediate danger spots in soft coal mining and building construction, both dominated by AFL unions.

But a more formidable test is expected within 60 to 90 days when big CIO unions move in a united front for cost of living adjustments in basic industries of steel, rubber, oil, meat packing, electrical manufacturing, automobiles and farm equipment.

Powerful independent and AFL unions will be moving about the same time toward reopening of contracts in the telephone and railroad industries.

Sen. Ball predicted the GOP-controlled congress will send labor legislation to President Truman's desk piece by piece rather than in an over-all omnibus bill. "That would be too hard on the president," he said. "He would have to veto all or nothing."

Ball said bills providing for equal responsibility for unions and management and regulation of union welfare funds probably will be introduced soon after congress convenes.

Revision of the Wagner act is "pretty much overdue," Ball said, but legislation to correct its fault will have to await intensive study by the senate education and labor committee.

Unexpected Winter Maroons Families

12 Reported Dead In Colorado Storm

Walsenburg, Colo., Nov. 11 — (UP) — Civilian rescue crews, manning army trucks and weasels, pushed on at dawn today carrying food and fuel for snow-bound ranch families and fodder for an estimated 40,000 cattle marooned on blizzard-swept rangelands.

Darkness and extreme cold last night had halted mass mobile rescue expeditions throughout southern Colorado. But at day-break caravans of heavy trucks and tank-like weasels rumbled forward through huge snowdrifts on mercy missions to human beings and animals caught in the icy throes of unexpected winter.

Twelve persons had died in Colorado as a result of the series of storms, chiefly from heart attacks brought on by over-exertion wading through deep snow or struggling with stalled automobiles. A thirteenth person, a shepherd, was given up for dead after a fruitless search through a mountain area where he had taken his flock before the snow started.

Nearly 50 vehicles from the Pueblo army ordnance depot were on rescue missions over a wide area, as well as army and private planes. They were recruited in the wake of a second snowstorm Saturday which aggravated already-serious conditions from the blizzard of Nov. 2.

One weasel-born party set out early today from Rattlesnake Butte, its all-night camping spot, toward the snowbound ranch home of Harry Willis, 10 miles away. Willis called for aid in getting his wife to a hospital for the birth of a child.

The rescue party fought snowdrifts up to 10 feet deep all day yesterday, covering only 20 miles. Mrs. Willis was to be taken in the weasel to an open highway where a passenger car could speed her to Walsenburg.

The U. S. weather bureau in Denver reported early this morning that the coldest spot was Fort Collins in northwest Colorado where the temperature dipped to two degrees below zero. Denver recorded eight above from a low of five above, and Pueblo had an early morning temperature of eight degrees.

Airplanes based at Pueblo were flying high to herds of cattle cut off without feed mills from their home ranches when the first snowstorm struck unexpectedly. Many trucks also were forging through almost impassable roads to take feed to marooned cattle, sheep and horses.

publicans 26 percent and the Socialists 17.9 percent.

Thus French voters again failed to give any party anything resembling a clear-cut majority. Delicate balancing of the three largest parties and smaller parties by negotiation will be necessary before a new government is named.

Two minor groups showed a notable growth in power, largely at expense of the Socialists.

The Right-Winged Republican party of Liberty (PRL), combined with the Gaullist Union and smaller conservative groups won 82 seats, a gain of 14. They polled 3,226,996, or 15.5 percent.

There were similar gains for the Left Republican Union, a grouping of moderate Left-Wingers including pre-war premier Edouard Herriot's radical Socialists. They won 59 seats, a gain of 18. Their popular vote was 2,136,152, or 11.1 percent.
