Joe Page Hero Of New York's Series Victory

New York, Oct. 7.—(UP)—A good-looking lad from Cherry-Valley, Pa., who on May 26 was one pitch away from the minor leagues, won the world series for the New York Yankees.

The hero was 30-year-old Joe Page, who as a rookie had shone, faded, then shone again with the Yankees, and who was just about to be let go after a long spell of ineffectiveness last spring.

Page, a strapping left-hander, came in yesterday against the Brooklyn Dodgers and retired 13 batters in order as New York won the seventh and deciding game of the world series, 5 to 2 at Yankee Stadium.

Admittedly a fast ball relief pitcher, who may well be the first of the rescue corps hurlers in history to win the "most valuable player award," Page said that he threw only two pitches that weren't fast ones.

"I gave pinch-hitter Gil Hodges a curve in the seventh and he fouled it off, then he struck out," he said "in the ninth with Dixie Walker up, I let him have a slider and he hit it to George Stinson for an infield out. The rest of the time I was just 'blowin' them in.'"

Page sat quietly in the hilarious Yankee dressing room. He was remembering, when everyone else had forgotten, that had he not produced in a relief assignment against the Red Sox on May 26, he would have been sent down to the minor leagues.

He struck out the first batter—that crucial one upon which his career depended, homer slugger Rudy York—and went on to strike out six batters in a row.

That was enough. Manager Bucky Harris decided that Page deserved a chance as a relief pitcher and he got it, winding up the season with a record of 14 victories, all in rescue appearances.

He gave the Yankees the pennant and yesterday he gave them the world championship.

Page asked for the chance to pitch that night after numerous failures, just as he asked yesterday to pitch against the Dodgers after being generally ineffective against them.

In winning the Yankees set many records—first of all they were the top team in baseball's first two-million dollar world series.

The series went on and on—there were more pitchers than in any other and they gave up more walks, threw more wild pitches, and their catchers produced more passed balls than in any other classic in history.

There were things to remember—no matter how long the time may go as world series games are played—nor how often the fan in the grandstand may sit and look upon future classics, hoping for something to top this one.

Study Intern Program For Vets' Hospitals

Indianapolis, Oct. 7.—(UP)—Dr. Paul R. Hawley, medical director of the veterans administration, has under consideration an intern program in veterans hospitals to fill VA's needs for 1,500 to 2,000 interns a year.

Hawley said he was considering such a program "seriously" and would offer interns training "that will compare with the best."

He said in an address at the Indianapolis medical center yesterday that he feared a drop in the demand of returning veteran physicians for resident graduate training. If that occurs, he said, the VA will "have to look elsewhere for some part of our staffs."

said in their joint statement that they have voted to accede to Mr. Truman's request "as evidence of their willingness to cooperate with the government at a time of emergency."

"If the President has been allowed to build his hope that in such a panacea lies the cure for high prices, then he has been sadly mishandled," the statement said. "Grain prices are being given undue emphasis as to the part they play in the overall food price situation. They are being unfairly and illogically used as the whipping boy."

"People are not being told that grain prices represent only a small part of the retail cost represented in a pound of round steak, a pound of butter, a loaf of bread or a bottle of milk. Service charges and other increasing costs have been much greater factors in rising prices of these commodities than has the mere cost of grain," the statement said. W. R. Scott, executive vice president of the Kansas City board of trade is to make a market place. Scott said it has never been considered in the scope of such an undertaking to direct trading in any way."
