Used Car Dealer Is Freed Under Bond

Seeks Two Million To Pay Off Debts

Jerseyville, Ill., Oct. 7—(UP)—Arthur F. Kramer set out today to dig up $2,387,065 in cash and "new used cars" to pay off more than 1,300 people who gave him down payments on automobiles.

Kramer was freed on $5,000 bond after he turned himself in last night to justice of the peace Arthur Thatcher.

Kramer's associate, used car dealer Robert L. Knetzer of Edwardsville, Ill., was missing, however.

Kramer claimed that Knetzer owed him $2,533,000 as a result of intricate deals in which the two men mushroomed their business to phenomenal proportions by promising to deliver "new used cars" at the standard price of $1,740.

Involuntary bankruptcy petitions were filed yesterday against the two men by purchasers who said they failed to deliver the promised cars and did not return their down payments.

Kramer was charged with fraud in a warrant obtained by Freeman Rogers, Alton, Ill., who said the used car dealer promised to deliver a two-door Chevrolet within 60 days. Rogers said he did not get the car nor a refund.

When he appeared before Thatcher last night, Kramer promised to repay all his creditors within three weeks or give them the cars he had sold them. On that pledge, Thatcher set Kramer's preliminary hearing for Oct. 29.

Kramer also entered a plea of voluntary bankruptcy at Springfield, Ill., in which he listed his assets at $2,533,000. But, he said, all but $33,000 of it was owed to him by Knetzer.

His debts totaled the $2,387,065 he had accepted as down payments on cars at the Alfalfa field he used as a "showroom" near here.

It was at the Alfalfa field where Kramer became famous throughout southern Illinois for the low-price—$1,740, no more or less—at which he offered cars.

He refused to tell how he could buy cars at $2,500 and sell them for the standard price although he had been visited by reporters from as far away as Chicago. He received orders on cars from all over the country and even delivered one for a Brazilian army officer.

Many customers of Kramer and Knetzer continued to besiege the state's attorney's office here and at Edwardsville to seek advice on how they could get their money back.

The involuntary bankruptcy suit against Knetzer was filed at Springfield by three men who charged that 90 days had passed since he accepted money from them but failed to deliver their cars. They claimed that he accepted $1,000 deposits on more than 100 automobiles. Federal judge Le Roy Adair named William C. Dunham of Collinsville as receiver.

A petition filed by Hugh Cross, Jerseyville attorney and lieutenant governor of Illinois, named Kramer as involuntarily bankrupt. There were more than 1,300 names on the petition.

Despite his troubles today, Kramer was still keeping silent about the source of the many cars he delivered before his bubble burst.

"That's a $5,000,000 secret," he said.
