High Jinks Missing At Opera's Meeting

Limelight Stolen By Judge Medina

New York, Nov. 22. — (UP) — Metropolitan opera first-nighters heeded the pleas of the management last night by shunning society highjinks and paying attention to the 65th opening performance. Not a single wealthy dowager showed a bare leg.

Although most of the 4,000 richly dressed and be-jeweled opera lovers attempted to enter the Met's bar at intermission for a glimpse of shenanigans which have made a side show out of the stage performance for the past decade, they were disappointed. The cut-ups of recent years stayed in their seats to hear Richard Strauss' "Der Rosenkavalier."

Only Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt, nearing 80 and confined to a wheelchair, created a little excitement. She threatened to rap a newspaper photographer with her cane when he snapped her picture as she was wheeled into the lobby.

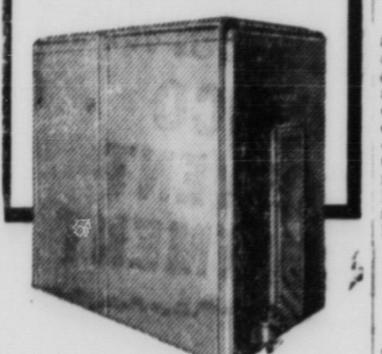

However, federal judge Harold R. Medina stole the limeight from New York's social leaders. The entrance of the jurist who presided over the nine-month trial of 11 communist leaders brought cheers and bravos from hundreds of persons watching the society show from the sidewalk, and he was followed by applause wherever he went in the opera house during the evening.

The entire opera as well as activities in the lobbies and lounge were televised by the American Broadcasting Company to audiences in New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Washington, Detroit, and Chicago at an estimated cost of $40,000 to the sponsoring oil company. Television officials said the telecast was a vast improvement over their first such experiment on opening night last year.

Edward Johnson, retiring general manager, credited the dignified behavior of the audience to his "back to normal" campaign. He said he hoped last night marked the end of the "pranks for publicity" era which has plagued his 15-year tenure.
