Lad With Pechant For Opening Gates Warned By Sheriff

Say, have you heard the one about the 13-year-old St. Mary's township boy that loves the wide open spaces? No? Then listen. Loves them so much, in fact, that he can't stand seeing a gate left closed, must always be opening them, and he is posing something of a problem for sheriff Bob Shraluka.

For the lad has a penchant for opening farmers' gates. A sort of full-blown victim of claustrophobia that doesn't stop at a mere dread of closed rooms. The boy was questioned by the sheriff. He said he liked to open gates. "Been doing it for more than a year," said the boy to sheriff Shraluka.

The youth worked at the job. One instance is recalled when he wanted a gate open. He had been operating in the vicinity for some time, and the farmer intended the gate be closed, so he nailed it. It didn't deter the lad. He tried to open it. "Just can't stand closed gates," he said to himself, and went to work with a vengeance and a crowbar.

"All in a day's work," he hummed when he'd finished opening this particularly tough gate. The lad sighed deeply. Then one day he opened the gate and let out a cow which a farmer valued at $400. The farmer said that the cow got into the corn, indulged too much, became ill, then died.

The farmer informed the sheriff. The sheriff pondered the question, what to do? He talked with the lad, pointing up the importance of keeping gates closed. He said to the boy that probably St. Peter was too much competition in the field of opening gates, and he should try a new avocation.

The farmer whose cow died from eating too much corn said he would not prefer charges against the youth. So the matter stands.

There isn't a gate in St. Mary's township that doesn't keep an apprehensive eye peeled, though, to this very day.

Withholding Rates

Will Be Increased

Higher Income Tax Effective Nov. 1

Washington, Oct. 24—(UP)—Unless you can wangle a raise in the meantime, your pay check is going to be smaller next month.

First effects of the increase in income taxes under the new law will be felt by all wage and salary earners whose pay is subject to the federal withholding levy.

The withholding rates will be increased 11 to 12 percent on all pay checks issued on or after Nov. 1—or as soon thereafter as employers can readjust their book-keeping to do it. The bureau of internal revenue says that because of the short time since the bill was enacted it will not insist on employers observing the exact date.

Here are some examples of the increases in withholding tax:

If you are single, make $70 to $72 a week and pay $10.50 a week through withholding taxes now, you will pay $11.60 a week.

If you are married, have no children, make $100 to $105 a week, and pay $13.80 now through withholding taxes, you will pay $15.40 a week.

If you are married, have two children, make $140 to $145 a week, and pay $16.40 a week now, you will pay $18.20 under the new law.

You can figure out for yourself about what your tax increase will be. For most people it will be close to 12 percent of what you pay now.

The withholding tax is a pay-as-you-go device which for most taxpayers roughly approximates the actual amount of federal income tax.

But everyone—including persons subject to withholding—must file final tax returns for 1951 sometime between the end of the year and next March 15.

When they do so they will find that their total 1951 income tax is about two percent higher than it was for last year. This is because the 11 percent tax increase will be effective for only one-sixth of this year—November and December. On an annual basis, the full effect of the increase will be felt on 1952 incomes.

Persons who pay all or part of their income tax in quarterly installments will make their next payment on Jan. 15. They can make it at the old rates if they want to and not pay the increase until they make their final 1951 settlement on March 15.

The common match is also a deodorant. Tests by chemists have demonstrated that the sulphur dioxide given off by burning matches effectively overcomes cooking and other indoor smells.
