Atom Exchange Is Slowed By Chile

Balk On Copper Is Slowing Exchange

Santiago, Chile — (UP)—Chile's surprise cancellation of her copper treaty with the United States has slowed up negotiations for Chilean uranium, U. S. mining men admit.

During part of April and May, representative from the Atomic Energy Commission studied uranium deposits in this mineral-rich country. Santiago newspapers have published accounts of uranium being found near the village of Tamboles.

As in the case of copper, however, Chile reportedly wanted a high price for her uranium.

American engineers pointed out that any bonus paid Chile for uranium would have to be matched for the Belgian Congo, which at present is the main source of uranium sent to the United States.

The one-year copper treaty just canceled by Chile provided that 80 percent of Anaconda Copper-Kennecott production in Chile be sold to the United States at 27½ cents a pound. American producers get 24½ cents.

Chile retained the other 20 percent, estimated to total around 80,000 tons a year but has been disappointed in her hope of selling it at higher prices on the world market.

The optimistic estimate that this copper could be sold at 54 cents a pound was used in preparing the Chilean national budget for 1952.

Now Chile hopes to negotiate a new copper agreement with the United States at possibly 33 cents a pound, covering the total production of the American-owned mines in Chile. Chilean representatives are aware of the problem posed to Americans of holding United States prices at lower levels, and of the unfavorable reaction in Arizona, Nevada and Montana if the spread in favor of Chilean copper were made even greater.

They hope, however, to put their story across and to convince the United States that it is worth $10,000,000 or even $15,000,000 to maintain a friend in a critical area.

The best known American monk,
the little capuchins, are so called because of the peak of hair
upon the head, suggestive of the hood worn by the Capuchin monks.

Three common beliefs are that bats snarl themselves in women's hair, falling cats always land on their feet, and elephants are afraid of mice. All are untrue.

Pacific mound-building birds lay
their eggs in piles of vegetation, scratches and mixed dirt and leave them alone. The heat generated by the decaying vegetable matter hatches the eggs.
